Relief Cash Demand Cut In New Bill By President

$1,322,000,000 Total Set for Supplemental Appropriations.

PWA Cost Placed At $500,000,000

House's Road-Building Fund Believed to Be Safe.

Intent on maintaining the same "emergency" budget set out at the first of this year, President Roosevelt early next week will ask Congress to approve a supplemental appropriations bill for $1,322,000,000.

This was announced after a Cabinet meeting yesterday, with an explanation by the President that the original $1,500,000,000 had been whittled down to take care of unanticipated appropriations by Congress.

Included in the general recovery fund will be provisions for the Civilian Conservation Corps and the Public Works Administration, with the latter scheduled to get at least $500,000,000, it is understood.

Other Amounts Not Disclosed.

The remainder will go to other agencies of the New Deal, in a manner so far undisclosed. Mr. Roosevelt did not "break down" the lump sum, which will form one of his last requests of Congress this session.

Hence, what effect the House's approval yesterday of a $460,000,000 fund for road building will have on his budget was undetermined. It was understood, however, that some such figure for this purpose was allowed for in arriving at the $1,322,000,000.

Added appropriations by Congress which caused the President to revise his emergency figures include $228,000,000 for veterans' benefits and pay restorations, $40,000,000 for crop production loans, $40,000,000 for farm mortgages, $29,000,000 for Mississippi flood control, $22,000,000 for additional veterans' benefits and $5,000,000 for the Army Air Corps.

$3,166,000,000 Wanted.

In his budget message to Congress last January, Mr. Roosevelt set forth $3,166,000,000 as the requirement for emergency needs to the end of this fiscal year, July 1, and the whole of next year. Soon after he asked and obtained $950,000,000 for the CWA and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

This left $2,216,00,000 still available, under his budgetary plans, to carry on the New Deal alphabet through another year, after which he hopes the Administration can return to a strictly balanced budget. Subtracting from this sum the approximately $364,000,000 extra appropriations voted by Congress, a margin of $1,952,000,000 remains.

The difference between the $1,322,000,000 the President is prepared to seek and this latter sum has not been accounted for, but it was assumed it might well include the road building program initiated by the House, as well as other miscellaneous expenditures.

Jockey Mergler Slugs Wife, Commits Suicide

4 Children Sleep Near as Father Wields Pipe, Shotgun.

Charles Mergler, a steeplechase jockey who once rode for Mrs. John Hay (Jock) Whitney, was found shot to death beside his unconscious wife yesterday in their home at Warrenton, Va.

Police believe Mergler beat his wife, Mrs. Gertrude King Mergler, with a 3-foot iron pipe and then killed himself. Their four small children were sleeping in another room when the tragedy occurred. Mrs. Mergler is in a critical condition, but is expected to survive.

The groans of Mrs. Mergler led to the discovery of the crime. Across the street, her sister, Mrs. Betty Fletcher, detected the sounds of agony. Aware that the couple had quarreled violently the day before, Mrs. Fletcher hurried over to the Mergler home, and when she was unable to enter, called police and also Coroner George Davis.

When entrance was gained, Mergler was found on his bed, with his wife on the floor beneath. The jockey apparently hau attached a wire to the trigger of a shotgun, propped it up on pillows at the foot of the bed, and yanked the wire. The load of shot hit his left side, around the heart.

Shake-up Due As Ineligibles Grab Relief

5,000 Undeserving Found on Rolls; Condition Angers Allen.

A drastic reorganization of the District Emergency Relief Administration was threatened yesterday by Commissioner George E. Allen after he heard Federal investigators had reported there are from 3,500 to 5,000 ineligibles receiving aid.

Angered by the disclosure by Federal Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, Allen pounded his desk and said: "If this is so, there is going to be a clean-out at the Emergency Relief. And when I say drastic reorganization, I mean drastic!"

"Who's fault is it that there are so many ineligibles on the rolls?" he was asked.

"It is my fault; but someone else is going to do some worrying," he replied. "I am at fault because Emergency Relief is my province and I am going to see that it is properly administered."

The presence of so many ineligibles was attributed by Leroy A. Halbert, director of Emergency Relief, to the fact that until six weeks ago there were insufficient workers to thoroughly investigate all applications.

That Allen is determined there will bea prompt shift in relief administration was indicated by orders to be issued today to Elwood Street, new director of the Board of Public Welfare, to begin immediately on a study of its organization.

Disclosure of the number of persons who are receiving relief checks who are not entitled to them was made by Hopkins as a result of an investigation by his agents. If these are dropped from the rolls it will mean a monthly saving of from $75,000 to $125,000, it was asserted.

Allen has consistently said that it

Widow of Tie Death Victim Held in Probe

Evidence of Struggle Seen in Basement of Home.

Strangled by a necktie in which his wife's fingers were entwined so tightly as to make them black, the body of Samuel L. Lytle, 42-year-old plumber and dance hall proprietor, was found yesterday in the cellar of their home in the 1300 block of Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

Sobbing hysterically, Mrs. Elizabeth Byrd Lytle, 38, told police of having been led to the cellar and thrown to the floor. Unable, she said, to make her husband release her, she screamed and beat on the coal bin with her free hand.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Odell, next door neighbors, were attracted and entered the house with police.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald ordered the body removed to the Morgue, although police expressed belief Lytle had died after a struggle. The post-mortem revealed, Deputy Coroner Christopher J. Murphy reported, he had died of asphyxia induced by strangulation. Mrs. Lytle, whom police said was intoxicated, was arrested and held for investigation.

Evidence of Struggle.

Smashed bottles and a pencil sharpener wrenched from screws in Lytle's basement office were evidence of a struggle, police said. Neighbors and a brother of the dead man, William H. Lytle, of the 1200 block of C street northeast, informed police the couple frequently had quarreled.

She denied either she or her husband had been drinking anything other than beer, and maintained death was accidental. Police said there were indications he had been drinking, too.

Her hand pinned under her husband's body, she moaned upon the arrival of police, "Make him turn me loose." Police slashed the tie.

Lytle was found lying face down 3 feet from the furnace and his wife sitting on his back. A butcher knife, which showed no signs of having been used, was found on a nearby box. An iron poker also was near

Davis Convicte In Montgomery

Former Takoma Park Aid Found Guilty of Embezzlement.

Bryan Davis was convicted by a Montgomery County Circuit Court jury last night of embezzling funds while town clerk and treasurer of Takoma Park from 1927 to 1932. He was accused of misappropriating more than $12,000.

Upon hearing the decision at 8:30 p. m., after the jury had been out 3 hours and 40 minutes, Judge Arthur Willard fixed bond at $7,500. The father, Benjamin G. Davis, Montgomery County commissioner and former secretary to William Jennings Bryan, posted bond.

Defense Attorneys F. Bernard Welsh and J. Bond Smith said they would file motion for new trial today. The motion is expected to be argued Tuesday or Wednesday.

The jury left the courtroom after impassioned pleas by State's Attorney Stedman Prescott that they convict Davis as a deterrent to other men entrusted with public money, and by Defense Attorneys F. Barnard Welsh and J. Bond Smith that they release Davis, whose only crime, they said, was "poor bookkeeping."

Testimony was completed Thursday. Yesterday was devoted to arguments. Each side was limited to three hours.

Judge Arthur D. Willard instructed the jury simply to return a verdict of either guilty or not guilty. A jury in Maryland is judge of the law as well as of facts, and is not instructed furthermore by the court.

Court Orders Railroad Sold at Public Outcry

Minneapolis, May 11 (AP).—The 60-year-old Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad, in receivership since 1923, will be offered for sale at public auction September 5, 1934, Federal Judge Wilbur F. Booth ordered today.

The sale of the line, which has 1,627 miles of track in Minnesota, Iowa, South Dakota and Illinois, is to be made under mortgage foreclosure to satisfy claims of mortgage bondholders. The road was valued at $52,711,097 in 1931.

Peanut Peddler Lodges a Big Kick Against the White House

The peanut vending of Steve Vasilakos, who has distributed goobers at the White House corner for 29 years, was called into question again yesterday.

Steve was described as the recipient of special favors and a violator of the law by a rival vendor who protested to Chairman Mary T. Norton of the House District Committee that peanut selling should be permitted on Sunday.

The restriction against such selling, according to Mrs. Norton's correspondent, James E. Winslow, of 419 Sixth street northwest, "is the worst form of discrimination, since it is directed against poor men who find it impossible to secure suitable employment."

"Here in the District," he went on, "where every form of business and amusements are carried on on Sunday, it is an outrage for police to be continually arresting vendors for selling on Sunday."

"We who happen to be Americans seem to have a disadvantage," said Winslow. "Let me call your attention to the Greek who sells peanuts in front of the White House. He violates all the police regulations, for which violations I frequently have been arrested. He sells on Sunday and is never molested by the police."

Winslow declared he could earn $4 or $5 on Sunday, as opposed to $1 to $1.50 a day during the week, which had forced him to appeal for charity last winter.

"I do not want charity," he said.

His letter was forwarded to Police Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen. If he prevails against Steve Vasilakos, he is a better man than the Washington Chamber of Commerce, which tried to move Steve from East Executive and Pennsylvania avenues for obstructing traffic. Both the President and Mrs. Roosevelt intervened, with the result that the Vasilakos roaster still toots.

President Wilson played the same role of rescuer for Vasilakos once. President Coolidge was one of Steve's best customers. But Steve regards Senator McAdoo as his closest intimate among the great, and when danger threatens it is to Senator McAdoo that he appeals.

NRA Report To Be Bared By Johnson

Denies Any Intention of Keeping It From Publication.

Darrow Board Launches Labor Study of All 420 Codes.

Bitter denial of charges that the Darrow board report on NRA had been "submerged" was offered yesterday by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson as he made known he would reply to the review board's blast at the same time the report is made public next week.

The recovery chieftain's plans were disclosed shortly after it was learned authoritatively that the Darrow board has begun a special study to determine whether labor has been discriminated against under any of the 420 NRA codes.

A broad inquiry into the effect of the recovery program on the workingman, it became known, probably would be the basis of a new report by the celebrated Chicago lawyer, Clarence Darrow, and his fellow board members. So far, the labor question has received little attention from the board.

Johnson ridiculed protests emanating from Capitol Hill that the Administration sought to minimize the importance of the report by referring it to the NRA, the Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission for study instead of publishing the document.

Report Called Ex Parte.

"It was an ex parte report," Johnson declared, "which I have a perfect right to answer at the same time it is made public. The President has accorded me that right.

"There was no idea whatever of submerging that report and no one ever entered into anything with more good faith than I did in the creation of that board. Whatever blame there may be I take upon myself, because I asked for it."

He made it plain he demanded to look at the Darrow report because he felt he had "a right to answer it." For aid in preparing his reply, he added, he sent the report to NRA division administrators in charge of codes under fire.

Says He Was "On Spot."

Asked for comment on informal complaint of Darrow board members that they failed to receive any cooperation from the NRA, Johnson responded:

"I was on the spot there. If anybody was to call on anybody for anything it was up to them to call on me. They didn't do it. They, of course, can have anything we have."

The administrator insisted his attitude toward the review board had always been friendly. He recalled that when Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), North Dakota, originally suggested creation of the Darrow agency, he indorsed the plan as "a great idea."

Nye commented that if the Administration "had wished to make a best-seller out of the Darrow re-

A man standing nearby with no implement handy was powerless. The dog rushed in and after drawing blood from the bull's flanks, seized it by the nose. Harried by the dog, the bull turned to attack it. Lindsey, seriously injured, managed to drag himself to safety. The dog eluded the bull.

Dust Storm Blots Light From City

Yellow Pall Sweeps in From Dry Midwest; Sun Hidden.

Grit Mantles Capital, Seeps in Homes; More Feared.

A thick cloud of dust, swirling at a high altitude from the sun-parched wheat fields of the West, hung over Washington yesterday, obscuring the sun. Some of it settled, covering the city with a thin, gritty layer.

According to the Weather Bureau, it was the worst duststorm ever recorded. From the Mississippi to the Atlantic and from Washington into Canada, the thick haze of dust hung in the air, darkening the sky and hampering aviation.

The storm was moving rapidly eastward and by today was expected to be over the Atlantic. The storm caused no damage here except to the results of spring house cleaning and an uncomfortable feeling in the eyes and throats of residents.

The Weather Bureau said that except for the dust the sky would have been clear, explaining that the clouds contained no water vapor but only billions of minute particles of Western top soil.

New York in "Fog."

At New York, the Associated Press reported, the tops of skyscrapers were obscured and visibility was limited. In Washington, the Tidal Basin was barely visible from the top of 13-story National Press Building, and the top of the Washington Monument penetrated a yellow, low-hung cloud.

According to Weather Bureau calculation, each cubic foot of air in Washington contained 9,450 particles of dust, about 9,000 more than normal. A square mile of atmosphere one foot thick, according to the bureau's reckoning, contained about 1,320,000,000,000 particles.

In Chicago, the Associated Press said, it was estimated that the air over the city was filled with 12,000,000 pounds of grit.

The United States Public Health Service was studying the storm, taking samples of the atmosphere here and in 12 other cities to determine exactly the density, the nature of the dust particles and their bacteriological content.

Another Storm in Sight.

It was said there might be another similar storm at any time unless rain soaks the parched soil of the Mississippi Valley, soil from which the crops have been almost completely burned by lack of rain and extremely high temperatures.

The Associated Press reported that light showers, the first in 28 days, had fallen in Chicago and in some other parts of the Middle West, but that they were not of even sufficient intensity to settle the dust.

Airplane service between Chicago and St. Paul was interrupted. Pilots said they had been unable to get above the cloud, and that the dust was traveling at a mile-a-minute rate.

In Wisconsin, it was reported, the storm was accompanied by strong surface winds, increasing forest fires which were sweeping some parts of the State.

One Man Freed In Dillinger Flight

Finger Print Expert Wins Acquittal, 2d Charged.

Crown Point, Ind., May 11 (AP).—Ernest Blunk, one of the two men accused of aiding John Dillinger to escape from the Crown Point Jail, was acquitted today.

Judge Maurice Crites, who heard the trial without a jury, decided the State's evidence was insufficient to support the charge that Blunk, fingerprint expert, willfully and feloniously aided Dillinger.

Sam Cahoon, a trusty who had the job of jail turnkey, was indicted with Blunk. His trial date has not been set.

Wheat Crop's Estimate Cut Again as Drought Continues Ruin in West

New York, May 11 (AP).—A battle by emergency inhalator squads to save 6-month-old twin boys from succumbing to pneumonia was only half successful.

Roy Barry, one of the twins, died early today at his parents' home in Brooklyn—on the first anniversary of the death of his twin sisters. They, too, died of pneumonia.

Ross Barry, who with his brother had received inhalator treatment for 40 hours by police and other volunteers, had a good chance of recovery, his physician said.

Neighbors prayed throughout the night in front of the apartment house in which the Barrys live. Inside Roy lay under a rudely contrived oxygen tent, a makeshift arranged by the doctor and a nurse.

A little after midnight the watchers gave up hope, and several hours later the boy died.

19,500,000 Bushels Are Lopped Off; Reduction Limit Extended.

Million Each Day Is Cost of Drought

Benefits From U.S. May Be Only Hope of Some Growers.

Continuance of the worst drought the West has experienced in decades yesterday caused officials of the Agricultural Department to clip another 19,500,000 bushels from the estimated winter wheat crop, and extend until May 16 the deadline for crop reduction agreements.

With another week granted to allow more farmers to participate, the benefit payment in many cases assumed the nature of "crop insurance" for wheat growers who, ironically, are asked to cut crops in the face of a drought that threatens to destroy what they do attempt to raise.

As thousands of tons of Western farm soil floated murkily overhead, President Roosevelt canvassed what rapidly was becoming a critical situation in the wheat-producing States with members of his Cabinet. Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins scanned reports.

Million Bushels Lost Daily.

Yesterday's cut in the May 1 crop estimate reduced it from 461,971,000 to 441,900,000 bushels. More than 1,000,000 bushels a day have been lost for a month by a drought which continued yesterday, with only scattered, local showers forecast for today.

The Weather Bureau predicted showers for Nebraska, Kansas, the Dakotas and parts of Minnesota, Iowa and Missouri. The rest of the drought area apparently will wither under the same cloudless sky for another day, it was said.

The Weather Bureau yesterday made public figure showing to what extent the intense drought has prevailed in the stricken area during the last four months.

North Dakota—1.20 inches of rain, the driest period on record.

South Dakota—1.86 inches, driest since 1890.

Nebraska—2.43 inches, driest since 1926.

Minnesota—2.55 inches, driest in history.

Illinois—6.17 inches, driest since 1895.

Indiana—6.84 inches, driest since 1889.

Kansas—3.54 inches, driest since 1909.

How Farmers May Benefit.

Extension of the AAA crop-reduction program to next week was announced at Urbana, Ill., by George E. Farrell, chief of the AAA wheat section. He explained the benefit payments would serve a secondary purpose by insuring growers against at least part of their impending loss.

Since benefit payments to participating farmers are computed on average production in the past, growers will get money for a

Pennsylvania Primary Stirs Rum Charges

Gubernatorial Candidate Accuses N. Y. Liquor Interests of Aid.

By Raymond Clapper.

Harrisburg, Pa., May 11.—The liquor issue is back in Pennsylvania politics in the first primary election since repeal.

Talk about the alleged use of liquor money in the hot primary contest is circulating underground. But as the campaign nears the finish line the question is coming nearer to the surface and is beginning to appear in veiled form in speeches of the candidates. There were indications tonight that more might be heard on the subject of campaign expenses before the voting on Tuesday.

The liquor issue was tossed directly into the 16-candidate race for the Republican nomination for Governor this week by Lieut. Gov. Edward C. Shannon. In a campaign speech he declared the "fight of the people against the bosses and the New York liquor interests will be fought to a decision."

Mr. Shannon himself is a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor. He refused to expand on his charge that New York liquor interests were taking a hand in the Pennsylvania fight, and declined to indicate the candidate supposed to benefit by the alleged alliance.

Won't Name Names.

"You can draw your own conclusions," he said, when questioned immediately after making his charge. "I am not naming anybody. I have gone through this campaign so far without indulging in personalities and I am not going to begin now."

The next day, Robert Dechert, campaign manager for Attorney General William A. Schnader, who is a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor, declared the liquor charge was false. He invited any one to inspect the list of contributors to the Schnader campaign fund. He said the report was based on false and malicious gossip.

It has come to him previously, Dechert said, through anonymous typewritten letters, and in oral form, usually with $25,000 as the amount of the subscription and two New York liquor firms named. He said he had studied the campaign subscription list of his candidate

Door Is Open To Substantial Debt Offers

Roosevelt Is Still Ready to Listen if Nations Seek Hearing.

By Kendall Foss.

The only possible way debtor nations may avoid incurring the dreaded stigma of "defaulter" is to offer a substantial portion of the sum due on the war debt accounts next June 15.

This was made clear yesterday after President Roosevelt said he was still unalterably opposed to a general discussion, but would listen at any time to any proposition a debtor nation cared to make. With this went the fact that State Department officials have been advising diplomatic representatives of debtor countries that token payments would risk a fight with Congress on them from the penalties of the Johnson act.

Tokens being no longer enough and full payment being out of the realm of likelihood, there remains an off-chance the President might seek Congressional authority to exempt nations from default whose offers approximate their "capacity to pay."

President to Hold Fire.

At the same time it appeared unlikely last night that the President woul risk a fight with Congress on the debt issue. Energy and ammunition, it seemed, would be saved for more pressing domestic matters.

With the possible exception of Great Britain it is not expected any debtor will trouble to offer a token payment unless assured this will enable it to avoid penalties of the Johnson act. By prescribing punishment for anyone dealing in the securities of a nation in default, the act effectually cuts off such nations from future American credits.

Britain may make a token payment of modest dimensions, experts suggested yesterday, even though she knows this will not spare her the charge of "defaulter." Certain indications from London seemed to show a growing desire to preserve her legal position by paying something on account, pending a new and supportable revision of the whole question.

Afraid of Bad Example.

This is attributed to the fact Britain has many more debtors than she has creditors. She wouldn't, it

U. S. Murder Warrant Out

Machado's Aid Hunted in New York on Plea of Cuba Consul.

New York, May 11 (AP).—Gen. Alberto Herrera, President of Cuba for a day after Gerardo Machado's flight, was accused of murder in a warrant issued today by the United States commissioner's office.

Gen. Herrera, white-haired veteran of Cuba's fight for independence, was missing tonight, as was Machado, his former chief, for whom a warrant charging murder and embezzlement was issued April 25.

The arrest was asked by Pablo Suarez, Cuban consul general here, who applied for the warrant. A city-wide search was begun immediately by United States Marshal Raymond J. Mulligan, in whose hands it was placed for service.

Milo A. Borges, attorney for the Cuban government in New York, who accompanied Consul Suarez to Commissioner Garrett W. Cotter's office, said he believed Gen. Herrera still is in the city.

Gen. Herrera was chief of staff, then minister of war in Machado's cabinet, and was the only secretary whose resignation the president had not accepted when he fled Cuba last August after riots in Havana.

It was presumed the warrant for Gen. Herrera's arrest was based on the allegation that he plotted with Machado and others to have police fire into mobs celebrating a false report that Machado had resigned.

Nazi Police Rout Ministers Fighting Hitler Church Rule

Berlin, May 11 (U.P.).—Germany's church controversy broke into violence tonight when police were called into action to disperse a demonstration of opposition pastors fighting unification of Protestant denominations under Nazi rule.

Police were called to break up the meeting held under the auspices of the Free Evangelical Synod in the Kurmak district of the Province of Bradenburg.

They dispersed the angry pastors on the grounds that one of the speakers declared "there is no justice in the present Protestant Church."

After slight scuffling, the assembly left the hall singing Luther's famous hymn, "Mighty Fortress of Our Lord."

and that no contribution was as large as $5,00, while the average was $140.

Treasurer Supports Claims.

His assertions were supported by Francis A Lewis ,treasurer of the Schnader committee. Other friends of Schader say that his campaign organization is practically without funds.

Operation of the State liquor stores is coming in for some attack. Gov. Pinchot, who is a candidate for the Republican senatorial nomination against Senator David A. Reed, put through a law providing for a State liquor monopoly, the profits of which were to be used to finance old age and unemployment pensions and relief for the blind.

Some drys are attacking Gov. Pinchot for winding up a long and specatacular dry crusade by "putting the State into the liquor business." The Governor's friends, however, feel that every such attack rebounds in his favor because it was the State liquor monopoly which made it possible to launch the program of old age and other welfare benefits.

But the fact is that the expected profits from the liquor stores have fallen far below expectations. Until heavier proceeds develope, the welfare payments can not be made as contemplated. Gov. Pinchot has, however, been able to allocate $1,250,000 from the liquor profits to finance payment of pensions to the blind for one year, beginning June 1.

Figures Not Available.

Official figures as the liquor store finances are not available. General talk around the Capitol appears to accept as approximately fair the figures published a few days ago in the magazine of the Pennsylvania Threshermen and Farmers Protective Association.

This publication estimated that the profits of the State liquor stores on the basis of present business will be about $10,500,000 a year, as against $27,500,000 called for by the welfare grants. The State liquor board, it asserted, is committed to purchase liquor amounting to $31,921,844.

"The huge stock of ordered liquor makes it appear that any profits probably will have to be invested in the liquor which the State already is committed to purchase," the article says.

This committment, whatever its exact figure, came about through a gentlemen's agreement entered into between the State and distillrs. It was ngotiated by Attorney General Schnader, when distillers filed suit to test the constitutionality of the State liquor law.

Distillers objected to a floor tax of $2 a gallon imposed on all liquor within the State at the time the law was passed. They said this was a confiscatory tax. The Attorney General, to avoid having the law tested in ocurt, made an agreement with the distillers whereby the State would purchase their liquor stocks and pass the tax on to customers of the State stores. The distillers agreed, it is understood, not to press their suit.

Prices Pushed Up.

Whatever difficulties this agreement may have resulted in, it is regarded by some as having avoided the chaotic situation which a resort to the courts might have involved at the outset of repeal. There is complaint, however, that this arrangement resulted in overstocking the State liquor store system, and pushed up the prices of liquor so far as to interfere with consumption.

Complaint against high prices became so strong that the State put out a dollar-a-quart brand which has further cut down sale of the more expensive stock taken over from the distillers, and while it has aided in quenching Pennsylvanians' thirst it has not helped the liquor board out of its main difficulty.

The original appropriation provided $2,000,000, with which to stock some 350 State stores. The State has been unable to meet its commitments for the additional liquor as rapidly as had been expected and distillers are clamoring to be paid. It is now considering issuing anticipation warrants, or negotiable promissory, which distillers could accept in payment and then discount through banking channels.

U. S. Bars Famous Violinist's Daughter

Anita Kubelik Is Declared Without Funds.

Baltimore, May 11 (Spl.).—Miss Anita Kubelik, daughter of Jan Kubelik, internationally known Czechoslovakian violinist, was refused admission into the United States here today by immigration officials.

Arriving from France aboard the City of Hamburg, Miss Kukelik was found to have no funds. Her destination, according to her visa, was Stanford, N. Y.

A sister waiting to meet Miss Kubelik, herself a violinist, demanded that a court of inquiry decide on her admission. The court, hastily convened on the Baltimore Mail Line pier, affirmed the inspectors' ruling. Steamship line officials are considering an appeal to the Secretary of Labor. The line is responsible for the custody of Miss Kubelik until she leaves the country or until she is allowed to enter.

theoretical reduction in acreage no matter what their crops. In many sections this will be the only income of some growers, officials believed.

The President is looking to the Emergency Relief Administration, captained by Mr. Hopkins, to sustain stricken areas in the Middle West. The administrator announced that Utah had been attollted $600,000 for projects to alleviate conditions there.

Despite weather which may lower the present 260,000,000-bushel surplus to below 200,000,000 for the first time in six years, wheat yesterday dropped 1⅛ to 2 cents on the grain exchanges. This was attributed to profit-taking following Thursday's jump of 5 cents a bushel.

Dakota Case Cited.

South Dakota's experience last year was cited by Farrell to explain the stabilizing value of benefit payments in years of crop failure Wheat raisers in that State, producing a crop of only one-tenth that of the year before, received more than half what they earned in 1932, he said.

Meanwhile, Representative Theodore Christianson (Republican), of Minnesota, told the United Press he is receiving reports that "beggar description." A farmer with horses, cattle and chickens to feed had only two bushels of wheat on his farm. Gaunt horses staggered in harness on many farms.

"We are getting daily reports," Mr. Hopkins said. "If present conditions continue, our program may have to be amplified, particularly for families in the drought areas."

Chester C. Davis, agricultural adjustment administrator, gave the opinion the farm organization would be of great benefit to cattle producers, according to the Associated Press. If cattlemen are driven to sell their stock by dwindling grass and water, the Administration is in position to support the market by relief purchases and make benefit payments to producers for reducing production.

Los Angeles, May 11 (AP).—Beverly Granger, actress, unexpectedly pleaded guilty today to charges of assault with a deadly weapon as a result of the wounding of Earl Courtois, salesman, in his apartment here. She was sentenced to ten months in the county jail.

The attorney asserted that the shooting, in which Courtois was twice wounded, grew out of a quarrel following a drinking party.

Rhode Island Puts Ban On Nudist Colony

Providence, R. I. (U.P.).—Roger Williams founded the colony of Rhode Island as a land of liberty, but the State apparently doesn't intend to interpret the founder's sentiments as a welcome to nudists.

A bill passed by the Senate would make nudism in any form a criminal offence.

It was prompted by reports that a nudist colony was about to be established on the shores of Narragansett Bay.

Shake-up Due As Ineligibles Grab Relief is immaterial to him what relief measures are, but he is determined that no one not entitled to said shall receive it, and is equally anxious that everyone who is in need shall receive proper care.

So that every case could be investigated properly, Allen increased the staff of case workers from 70 to 225. This increase was made after Arch Mandel, a Federal relief agent, had made a preliminary survey of local conditions.

Halbert, who is expected to be relieved of his duties as emergency relief director and relegated to a subordinate position, said he was unaware that there are so many ineligibles receiving help.

"If I knew there were so many persons who were imposing upon us, I would have stricken them from the lists," he said. "Our workers are continually combing through the records to find ineligibles. Each week we drop about 300 persons."

In the past, he said, there were only 70 case workers to inquire into 25,000 cases, and as a consequence many persons were able to impose on the District. The small staff, he added, found it impossible to keep continual checks on relief seekers. With the increased personnel, he said, a more thorough job may now be done.

Recheck Planned.

Allen's idea is have a number of trained investigators make a recheck on all cases which should bear scrutiny. Additional inquiries would be made only in those cases where a doubt of eligibility arises.

If the ineligibles are stricken from the lists, it is expected that June expenditures will total about $700,000. Last month the District spent $892,000 on relief, while $1,000,000 was spent in March. This brought the investigation order from Hopkins.

For May Hopkins already has granted $400,000, and it is expected a similar allotment will be forthcoming in the next few days.

Street is not scheduled to take his post as welfare director until June 1. He submitted his resignation yesterday as director of the Community Chest. However, Allen has asked him to begin his reorganization studies now, with the emergency relief division receiving first consideration.

port, it could not have taken a better course so far."

Delay for Hush Reasons Feared.

He said he feared that an attempt was being made to avoid making the report public until Congress had adjourned so that members could not express themselves forcibly on the Darrow board revelations, understood to criticize NRA as an agency devoted to encouragement of monopolistic practices and big business.

"I am not going to do anything about the report at this time," Nye said. "I am taking the attitude the Administration will make it public next week. If it is not made public then some steps will be taken to pry it loose."

Darrow, accompanied by his aid, Charles Edward Russell, former Socialist party leader, visited Nye yesterday. The Senator reported Darrow indicated a "keen interest" in the work he was doing and was anxious to get the opinion of Congress. The lawyer said his board was examining new codes and would keep on working, despite the disposition made of its report.

President Is Annoyed.

Obviously annoyed over statements that the Darrow report would not be made public, President Roosevelt corroborated Johnson when he said the document would be ready for the press early next week.

Johnson also announced NRA was studying small codes in a desire to merge them where possible. He indicated some of the comparatively unimportant codes might be abandoned.

At present, he pointed out, "about 85 per cent of the time, personnel, effort and money around here is being spent on 15 per cent of the problem."

His statement revived reports that officials were irked by troublesome price-fixing provisions in several of the service codes, such as cleaning and dyeing, and might work out some new plan to reduce public complaint against those units.

them. Mrs. Lytle had banged with the poker to attract attention.

Replying incoherently to Detective Sergt. John C. Dalglish, she said she had been out drinking beer with a girl friend, which fact was confirmed by Joseph C. Tolson, of the 1200 block of E street southeast, who said Mrs. Lytle had been in the establishment where he was employed until 11 or 12 o'clock Thursday night.

Mrs. Lytle said she found her husband awake upon returning home. While they were having late supper, she said, he began acting queerly. He made her accompany him to the basement, grabbing her left hand so tightly that it became numb.

In the basement, she quoted him as saying: "I'm going to make you lie down here with me."

"We lay down, or sort of fell down," she continued. "Then I began screaming for help, trying to wake up somebody."

Wife's Arms Bruised.

The dead mans' ears were bloodied, loking "as though they might have been scratched in a fight," Coroner MacDonald stated after a cursory examination. Mrs. Lytle's arms were bruised, he added, and both of her hands were black and swollen.

Stricture of the tie was so great that flesh of Lytle's throat and her fingers were badly swollen.

After repeating the story to her attorney, Charles E. Ford, retained by her brother, Thomas L. Waller, Mrs. Lytle was returned to the House of Detention pending an inquest set for 11:30 a. m. today.

Policeman Snags Boy Rovers' Raft On Rock Creek

Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn, of the Washington, 1934, edition, ran afoul the law Tuesday night, suffering a curtailed itinerary and a severe lecture.

Six prospective seamen—one 13, one 14 and the rest 15 years old—were discovered by police in Rock Creek-Potomac parkway fashioning rafts from lumber filched from the Calvert Street Bridge construction job. One craft already had been given a test trial down the creek.

When Sergt. H. T. Miskell, of park police, came along he piled the boys into his car and took them to their homes, meanwhile lecturing on the sanctity of private property, the fate of violators, &c.

So the trip down the river will have to wait.

Way Left Open To Substantial Debt Payment is felt, want to set these debtors of hers a bad example. Her position would be this:

"The Americans may be calling us defaulters, but you debtors of ours can see for yourselves we are doing what we can and, of course, we expect you to do likewise."

France seems to have toyed with ment this June after flatly passing the three previous due dates, but there is little reason to suppose she will carry the plan out unless assured it will relieve her of the unwanted onus. She, too, has debtors.

Other nations have even less reason to do anything unless they can get assurances that the amounts they feel able to pay will keep American credit sources open to them.

Showdown Around Corner.

No one yesterday seemed to expect any debtors to come forward with such a substantial offer that President Roosevelt would wish to ask a truculent election-year Congress to approve it.

A good many close followers of the international debt tangle thought the semiannual periods of irritation and confusion was nearer an end than appeared on the surface. They suggested that refusal to take tokens in lieu of full payments could only result in no payments at all. There would, they reasoned, be a brief period of recrimination and then the debt issue would slide into the realm of forgotten things that couldn't be worked out.

Asked about the Johnson act, they countered by reminding no loans of any size can be floated here now and that by the time the market revived the whole picture might b so different that the Johnson bill would be forgotten too.

Farm Act Held Magna Charta Of Agriculture

Credit Law Basis of Great Social Change, O'Neal Says in Lexington.

Lexington, Va., May 11 (AP).—Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, called the agricultural adjustment act "this great Magna Charta of agriculture" in a speech here today. He added that the social and economic change which is coming about among the farm people of the Nation under the act is the greatest cooperative movement among farmers in American history.

He told his audience at the two-day conference on the National recovery program, under the auspices of the Commerce School of Washington and Lee University, that the main feature of the program is based on the principle of the equalization fee.

He said it was a recognized policy of the Government, practiced for more than 70 years in the development of the country's greatest industries. Mr. O'Neal explained that he spoke of the processing tax; paid by all consumers of the specific agricultural commodities which are affected.

Price Parity Is Goal.

Its purpose, he said, "is to restore price parity to agricultural producers," thus bringing the price of farm products to the level of the commodities the farmer purchases.

He described the resut of the act on the cotton market. As soon as it was learned, he said, that producers were going to control production, there was a demand for cotton. Despite a carried-over surplus large enough to supply the world for a year, the price rose from 5½ to 11 cents a pound.

Quoting the cotton administrator of the adjustment act, Mr. O'Neal said: "The whole cost of the program, including payments to cotton farmers in rental and benefits, $163,000,000, has been more than paid for by the increased price we have received for our export cotton alone." He set that figure at $175,000,000.

Tobacco Results Cited.

Results for the tobacco farmers were equally satisfactory, the speaker asserted. The price has practically doubled, despite a large accumulated surplus, he said.

The other vital factors of the adjustment program, he declared, have been Constitutional control of money for the benefit of the people and not for the benefit of a selfish banking group and the farms credit act. The latter, he said, has relieved heavy farm foreclosures throughout the Nation.

Gettle Ransom Set at $75,000; Police Retire

Lawyer Gets Phone Call and Agrees to Pay; Details Awaited.

Los Angeles, May 11 (AP).—A climax in the kidnaping of William F. Gettle, oil millionaire, seemed imminent today after the family negotiator agreed to pay $75,000 ransom demanded by a mysterious telephone caller, and all police were withdrawn from the investigation.

Ernest E. Noon, attorney for Mrs. Gettle, made a secret trip shortly after agreeing to pay the ransom. On his return he said he expected developments soon, but he made no other statement.

His departure followed a visit to a bank, and a hurried conference with District Attorney Buron Fitts and Federal agents.

Whether Noon obtained any money at the bank could not be learned. Shortly after he left a statement signed by representatives of all law agencies in the kidnap hunt, including the Department of Justice, announced willingness to withdraw their officers to permit negotiations for the return of Gettle.

Attorney Gets Phone Call.

The demand for ransom was made, Fitts said, to Noon. It came after a night of frantic endeavor by thousands of peace officers and scores of friends of the family to find some trace of the snatchers or to persuade them, through appeals, to set their price.

At mid-morning, the attorney informed Fitts he had received a telephone call "from a party who informed him they had Gettle alive and wanted $75,000 ransom."

Noon said the telephone conversation went like this:

"Mr. Noon?"

"Yes."

"Will you pay 75 grand?"

"Why, yes——why——yes."

"Well, make up your mind."

"All right."

"Now you follow the instructions and everything will be all right."

Connection Broken.

Noon said there followed from the telephone caller some reference to an automobile and the connection was broken.

"By reference to an automobile," Noon was quoted as saying, "I mean that the man began talking about a car some place.

"I couldn't quite get the drift of it when the line was cut off. We are now waiting for another call from this party."

From that point developments began to unroll with progressively increasing speed.

Noon called Fitts to his office and sent downstairs for the trust officer of the bank. Fitts proclaimed the calling-off of all police activity in the case.

The attorney left his office but returned soon, stopping at the bank on his way back to his desk, and again he left. Soon it became known he had advised the prostrated wife of the millionaire of the telephone call indicating her husband was alive.

Fear for Wife's Life.

Mrs. Gettle was said to have collapsed under the excitement and fear for her life was expressed.

On his second dash out of his office, Noon sped down Santa Monica boulevard in an automobile. Again returning, he said he expected developments soon.

Reports had been circulated that investigators had picked up information indicating the coolly executed kidnaping at the end of a midnight swimming party on the Arcadia estate of Gettle had been an "inside job." It was said also a man known as a friend of the abducted millionaire was being hunted. There was no confirmation of these reports.

A woman taken into custody last night by the investigators was questioned for three hours, after which officers said she would be released. Officers said she was "a great talker."

Switz Calls Bercowitz One Chief of Spy Band

Paris, May 11 (AP).—Benjamin Bercowitz, variously identified as a Canadian and a Rumanian, was described today by Robert Gordon Switz as one of the chiefs of the band of spies which Switz and his wife have confessed sought French military secrets.

The American said his wife concealed 63,000 francs under her belt and paid it to Bercowitz in Paris. Mrs. Switz corroborated his testimony.

Reynolds Hits Home Owners' Loan "Delays"

Senator Demands Probe in North Carolina; Fahey Replies.

Declaring the Home Owners Loan Corporation "is entirely out of keeping with the Administration in its effort to bring relief to those who rightfully demand it," Senator Robert R. Reynolds (Democrat), North Carolina, last night demanded "immediate improvement" and an investigation of conditions in his home State.

Senator Reynolds' charges came simultaneously with the removal from office of State Manager Kennedy, corporation representative in Connecticut, and the departure of Charles W. Collins from Washington to replace him.

Replying to Reynolds, John H. Fahey, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, said last night:

"The board is fully aware that conditions in North Carolina are not altogether satisfactory. It has been carrying on an investigation in that State for some time and has special representatives there now. A number of steps already have been taken to improve the service there. The board intends to adopt any measures to assure further improvement. It is confident the changes already made and in process will result in better progress."

In his statement, Senator Reynolds said:

"If some improvement is not forthcoming immediately and the handling of loans speeded up, I intend to lay the facts before Congress. It is an outrage that the people of North Carolina should have to put up with existing conditions in the Home Owners Loan Corporation. I can reach no other conclusion than that the executive officials of the corporation are responsible.

"A continuation of loan applications at the present rate will mean that it will take fully two years to close them. Meantime, hundreds of homes will be lost to their owners. Years of sacrifice to maintain those homes will have come to naught."

British Library Given World's Smallest Book

London (U.P.).—The Bodleian Library at Oxford, the home of many priceless manuscripts and gems of literature, has, by the gift of an American poet, Henry R. Chamberlain, obtained possession of what is regarded as the smallest book in the world.

The book, which is one-quarter of an inch in height and three-sixteenths of an inch in width, weighs a grain and a half, the size of the type used on each page is three thirty-seconds of an inch in height and five thirty-seconds in width.

It is a translation into English verse of parts of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam and was printed by the Commonwealth Press at Worcester, Mass.

Whisky No Spring Fever Remedy, He Decides

Buffalo, N. Y. (U.P.).—Whisky is no spring fever tonic. So ruled Judge Clifford J. Chip in finding John Schultz, 38, guilty of intoxication.

"It was like this, judge," Schultz explained. "I got spring fever and when I get that way I feel blue, so I thought a couple of drinks would do me some good."

"Well, did it?" queried the Court.

"No, I feel worse now," Schultz answered glumly.

Husband Admits He Killed Bride

Police Guard Frenchman as Mob Threatens.

Lorient, France, May 11 (AP).—A crowd gathered tonight outside the police station where Michel Henriot, nephew of Deputy Philippe Henriot, was held and shouted angry threats against the young man who earlier had confessed, police said, that he killed his bride of five months.

Henriot is 23 years old and the son of the local prosecutor. Armed police spirited him to a nearby jail tonight. He was placed under a heavy guard. Mme. Henriot was found dead in her farm home near here last Wednesday. She had been shot six times.

Police reported that a confession was obtained after they learned Henriot had insured his wife against murder.

Miami, Fla., May 11 (U.P.).—The Navy dirigible Macon left its mooring mast here today to rejoin the United States fleet in war maneuvers in Caribbean waters.

The Macon is scheduled to return here Sunday after its second trip to the war games, for a final reconditioning before its flight to its base in California.

Ozark Horses Replace Motors of Family Autos

JOPLIN, Mo., (U.P.).—In the name of economy, the horse is coming back into its own in the Ozark Hills of southern Missouri.

Farmers, hard-pressed to get the money together for taxes and interest on the old homestead, are unable to buy new motor licenses, gas and oil. And so the old family car, in many instances, is being shunted into the barn and the horse used.

The motor and body of the car are being put aside. Many farmers are using the chassis of their car as a base for a wagon or buggy bed. They find the rubber-tired wheels run more easily than the old wagon or buggy wheels.

Stricter Laws Urged To Cut Traffic Toll

Automobile Club Head Also Advocates Schools for Drivers and Cites Success of This Plan Elsewhere; Favors Liability Law.

By Felix Bruner.

Washington's rapidly mounting toll of traffic deaths can be reduced by increasing the responsibilities of drivers and by more rigid enforcement of the law, in the opinion of Ernest N. Smith, executive vice president of the American Automobile Association.

Smith proposed a general four-point traffic program as a means of bringing about a reduction in the number of accidents in the District:

1. Comprehensive legislation to give adequate control over traffic.
2. Comprehensive and continuing engineering studies to keep abreast of traffic needs.
3. Enforcement.
4. Continuous public education, both of children and of adults.

Nnder the heading of legislation, Smith believes that much can be accomplished by enactment of a District drivers' responsibility law, now pending in Congress. The bill has been reported favorably by the House District Committee and will be considered by the Senate Committee Wednesday.

Would Call for Driver Bond.

Under the provisions of the bill, an automobile owner whose car has been involved either in an accident or in a serious violation of traffic rules would be required either to take out liability insurance or to post a bond to indemnify any one injured by his car or whose property has been damaged.

This plan already is in operation in 22 States and Canada. Smith and other Automobile Association officials feel that such a law, making known reckless drivers financially responsible in case of accident, would go a long way toward accident reduction. Drivers would know that if they violated traffic laws or become involved in an accident they would be required to demonstrate their financial responsibility in case of accident or be deprived of the right to drive a car.

"We do a great deal of talking about parking, about traffic lights and about one-way streets," Smith said, "but these things do not reach below the surface of the problem. Washington invites hundreds of thousands of visitors to come to the city and then makes no adequate provision for handling the additional traffic. The recent Cherry Blossom Festival is a case in point."

Urges Constant Study.

The Automobile Association is suggesting no specific solutions, but it is suggesting that continuous study be given the problem by experts and that responsibility for carrying out recommendations, resulting from these studies be definitely fixed.

In discussing enforcement, Smith expressed the opinion that one of the present difficulties arises from the hit-and-miss way in which traffic cases are handled. He pointed out that there is no uniformity or certainty in handling traffic cases in court because they are not handled by a specifically designated traffic court. He expressed the opinion that a separate traffic court, with quick and certain handling of violations would go a long way toward reducing the accident toll here.

"Uniformity of enforcement of traffic laws is a necessity of drivers are to understand that the community is serious in insisting that they obey the law," he said.

One of the most valuable aids in cutting down accidents is an analysis of accidents, showing when they happen and where they happen and how they happen, Smith said.

Data Little Used Here.

"All cities that have made progress in accident reduction have used such analyses," he said. "I understand that Washington has a good system of such records. But little is being done to apply from a practical standpoint data collected from accident study to a specific situation."

Education, Smith believes, is one of the most important factors in accident reduction.

"We are educating the children, and doing a good job of it in Washington," he said, "but little is being done toward education of adults."

As a result of child education, he pointed out that in seven years the number of fatalities among school children has been reduced 40 per cent in Washington. At the same time automobile registration increased 41 per cent, school attendance increased 25 per cent and the number of adult and infant fatalities increased 15 per cent. Since these figures were compiled, the increase in adult fatalitis has been much larger.

Many cities, Smith pointed out, have cut accidents by establishing schools for offenders. In cases of minor infractions o frules and laws, judges have sentenced the offenders to attend school, rather than to pay fines. New York and St. Louis, Smith said, have been particularly successful in conducting such schools.

Voluntary Classes in Jersey.

Jersey City went even farther and established a voluntary drivers' school. Attendance at this school was small until policemen were instructed to suggest to minor violators that it might be a good idea for them to attend the school and obtain a windshield sticker attesting the fact that they had attended. This resulted in capacity attendance.

In Pittsburgh there is an annual appropriation for traffic education Accidents clinics are held in various communities and residents of those communities are invited to attend and discuss their neighborhood traffic problems. These problems are then analyzed and, if possible, solved.

Rhode Island has a most interesting and effective system. Accidents and traffic violations are recorded under the names of drivers. When it is indicated that a particular driver has become an habitual accident cause, he is called in, given an opportunity to talk over his problems, and appropriate action is taken.

Records invariably show that the same drivers usually are responsible for accidents. Frequently certain drivers are found to be accident causers, just as certain individiuals are found to be disease carriers. Under the Rhode Island system, these accident causers can be spotted immediately and the reason for their trouble determined.

Sea-Mail Quiz Places Astor's Yacht to Fore

Messages Sent as Chief Executive Was Aboard to Be Involved.

Vincent Astor's yacht, Nourmahal, on which President Roosevelt has sailed for several vacation fishing trips, is expected to reap new prominence in the Senate's investigation of ocean mail contracts which resumes next week.

Kermit Roosevelt, son of the late President, and cousin of the present Chief Executive, has been asked to appear on Wednesday with P. A. S. Franklin, president of the International Mercantile Marine. Roosevelt is an I. M. M. vice president and Astor is a director.

It was indicated the inquiry would involve testimony about secret communications which Franklin allegedly sent to young Roosevelt aboard the Nourmahal while the President was a passenger.

The investigation is being made by the same special committee whose inquiry into Hoover Administration air-mail dealings resulted in cancellation of all domestic contracts last February.

Harlee Branch Asked to Talk.

Chairman Hugo L. Black (Democrat), Alabama, said the group would devote Monday and Tuesday to completion of testimony by air-mail witnesses summoned by Republican committeemen. Harllee Branch, Assistant Postmaster General, has been asked to give his views on progress of aviation under former Postmaster General Walter F. Brown, and the effect upon the industry of the contract cancellations.

The Nourmahal was brought into the ocean mail inquiry by Senator Arthur Robinson (Republican), Indiana, who demanded, in a Senate speech, that Astor and Kermit Roosevelt be summoned to explain the alleged communications with Franklin.

Black informed the Indiana Senator he would "be very glad" to permit Robinson to attend committee hearings and interrogate the two men, "or anyone else."

The chairman said yesterday he believed the inquiry would be short because much evidence is in documentary form and merely would be inserted in the record.

Brown Has Important Role.

Brown, who figured prominently in the air-mail inquiry, is expected to have an important part in the ocean mail inquiry. Testimony already has been taken that he planned to award an ocean mail contract the day he left office in 1933, but finally decided to leave the matter to his successor, James A. Farley.

The committee has been idle since the Senate passed the Black-McKellar air-mail bill. Its original program called for an investigation of Pan-American Airways before it resumed the ocean mail inquiry. Black would not reveal whether the group contemplated dropping the Pan-American investigation.

Senator Warren R. Austin (Republican), Vermont, leading critic of Roosevelt Administration air policies, said he would continue to press for publication of testimony given by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh to a Department of Justice agent at a secret conference while the famous flier was here to testify on the Black-McKellar measure.

Sollitt & Sons Lose License Plea

U. S. Supreme Court Holds Virginia Due Fee.

Richmond, May 11 (AP).—M. B. Watts, clerk of the supreme court of appeals, today received from Washington an order of the United States Supreme Court dismissing the appeal of Ralph Sollitt & Sons Construction Co.

The construction company had asked a reversal of a ruling by the State's highest tribunal holding Virginia had a right to collect a contractor's license from the Sollitt company.

The company held that as its only work in Virginia was the construction of the Lynchburg postoffice the State had no right to impose a contractor's license on it.

Revolution Hit Chemical World In Past 50 Years, Says Dr. Reese

Hopewell, Va., May 11 (AP).—The old and the new in chemistry were discussed by Dr. Charles L. Reese, president of the American Chemical Society, in an address before the Virginia section of the society here tonight.

Intimate high lights in the lives of great chemists of other days were given by Dr. Reese, who studied under some of them both in the United States and abroad.

Hopewell was not new to Dr. Reese, for he directed the work of the Du Pont war plant here during the World War, when it made more sulphuric acid than all the British Isles. He told of the construction of the Hopewell plant without the use of lead—a revolution in the industry.

Dr. Reese was educated at the University of Virginia, Johns Hopkins, Heidelberg and Gottingen. He told of the professors at these institutions—men known to most chemists today only through textbooks, and by their works. He dealt intimately with their personalities.

Among others were Prof. T. P. Dunning and Prof. J. W. Mallet, of the university. The former was present last night when Dr. Reese made a speech in Charlottesville, where he was graduated from the university 50 years ago. The latter was in charge of munitions for the Confederacy during the War Between the States.

The subject of his address tonight was "A Half Century in Chemistry." Dr. Reese, a native of Baltimore, is internationally known for his work in the development of industrial research. He discussed this phase of his work at length, and said his career did not begin until he was 40.

Prof. L. B. Hitchcock, chairman of the section, presided at the meeting.

Red Cross Relief Work Described

Newport News, Va., May 11 (AP).—Progress in "disaster prevention" work—the prevention of casualties in disasters such as storms—by the American Red Cross was described here yesterday at an eastern Virginia conference by Maurice P. Reddy, national headquarters disaster relief director.

Mr. Reddy compares the 52 lives lost in the hurricanes of last year, which destroyed $30,000,000 worth of property, with the approximately 6,000 people killed by the Galveston flood a quarter century ago. The difference, he said, is largely due to the vast improvement in systems of warning through more cable connections and radio, which make possible better weather forecasts.

22 Beer Merchants Forced to Suspend

Carroll County Licensees to Await New Permits.

Westminster, Md., May 11 (Spl.). Failure to apply for their licenses in time forced 22 persons to suspend the sale of beer and light wine throughout Carroll County this week.

An officer working under the Carroll County Board of License Commissioners notified the merchants who had not obtained their permanent licenses that they must suspend sales immediately. The 22 retailers were ordered to turn in a temporary license which was found to have been improperly issued on May 1 to late applicants.

According to the board of license commissioners, applications for permanent licenses which expired on April 30 should have been made early in April, as the law provides that a notice be published for two weeks following the application. After the publication a hearing is held by the board within seven days.

Only 50 per cent of the persons holding licenses expiring April 30, made application for permanent licenses in time to avoid suspension of sales.

Charge Schools Curb Religious Chances Denied

Youths Respond Eagerly in State Universities, Says Dr. Newcomb.

Staunton, Va., May 11 (AP).—The common belief that State universities do not provide opportunities for their students to get religious instruction is false and is contradicted by actual facts in practically every American State university, Dr. John Lloyd Newcomb, president of the University of Virginia, said tonight in an address before the Men's Club of the Trinity Episcopal Church of Staunton.

"It is a favorite pastime with some critics to assert that modern youth is irregilious, that it has slipped its ancient moorings and has set sail upon an uncharted sea without a moral rudder," President Newcomb continued.

"I, for one, living as I do in daily contact with youth, refuse to subscribe to any such nonsense. On the contrary, I claim that there never was a time when real religion had a better opportunity to make strong and lasting appeal than to the youth of today.

Sham Has Lost Appeal.

"Sham and sentimental pretense masquerading in the name of religion has lost all appeal. The hell and damnation type of religion finds no champion in modern youth. A speaker possessed of spiritual force and character, bringing the true message of the living Christ, will fill the auditoriums of the colleges today as never before, and will find intelligent youth eagerly absorbing his every truth.

"If any are disposed to question this statement, I wish you might have been at the University of Virginia two weeks ago when young Arthur Kinsolving, rector of Trinity Church, Boston, delivered a series of lectures to students.

Attendance Increased.

"The student attendance grew as each lecture was delivered. There was no compulsion—they were free to come, to play golf, or to otherwise divert themselves. They came in large numbers, listened eagerly and scores—yes, hundreds, demanded personal interviews.

"I think the one best hope for lasting peace and the salvation of the world can be found in the student Christian union. Although these groups are numerically small, they are scattered throughout every country in the civilized world, and their hope for world peace lies in the fact that they put their allegiance to Christ and their union above the love of country."

President Newcomb outlined the university's nonsectarian courses in religious subjects, given for credit, and told how the student pastors of various faiths are working with university men.

William Gaxton, Star of Musical Stage, Is Signed for Film—Beauty in Demand

Comedian Cast In Support of ZaSu and Slim

Was President Wintergreen in Two Musical Satires; Amusement Chat.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

By Nelson B. Bell.

The motion picture industry, at last, has remedied a serious oversight.

William Gaxton, who, as one of the famous trio of stars in "Of Thee I Sing" and its sequel, "Let 'Em Eat Cake," was "His Excellency, John P. Wintergreen, President of the United States," has been signed by RKO-Radio to lend his comedy gifts to "Afterwards," the production which reunites ZaSu Pitts and "Slim" Summerville as a costarring team. This is a little matter of casting that the cinema should have seen to long ago.

Although Gaxton is making his screen debut in "Afterwards," he is no stranger to California. In fact, he is a native son whose forebears have lived in the State for generations. He was born in San Francisco of Spanish parents. Among his schoolmates at Lowell High School in San Francisco were James Gleason, Walter Catlett, Charlie Ruggles and John Sheehan. One is constrained to believe that Lowell High must have specialized in comedy routines from the number of funny men it turned out!

Later Gaxton entered the University of California, but the call of the stage was greater than that of the study halls.

Began in Vaudeville.

The alert and incisive Mr. Gaxton, with his close-clipped speech and fair singing voice, broke into show business via vaudeville, achieving the "big time" in short order. Not too long ago, he wrote his name up high in the annals of the two-a-day, along with Lou Holtz, Kate Smith, Frank Fay and a very few others, by playing the old Palace Theater on Broadway for ten consecutive weeks.

His first appearance in a Broadway musical show was in the second "Music Box Revue," in which he appeared as a low-comedy Chinaman in the skit that provided Bobby Clark and Paul McCullough the opportunity to pull that classic line about the degree of cleverness possessed by the Chinese! After that he was in "Betty Lee," "All For You" and "Miss Happiness."

Long-Run Parts.

Then came his great opportunity, the chance to create the title role in "A Connecticut Yankee," a part he played for two years. Next he scored in "Fifty Million Frenchmen," a condensed version of which was presented as the stage show at Loew's Fox a few weeks ago.

When he is seen on the screen, however, it will probably be as President John P. Wintergreen, heading the ticket that also included the illustrious Vice President Alexander Throttlebottom, that the greatest number will remember him. And it will seem to a vast majority of these, no doubt, that both Lois Moran and Victor Moore ought to be in the picture, too—although that might make the going just a little tough for Mr. Summerville and Miss Pitts.

Speaking of musical entertainment, there is another dab of it, in topical revue form, coming to town along toward the end of the month. That is to say, "Stand Up and Cheer," the screen production that started out to be the "Fox Movietone Follies of 1934," is penciled in to be shown at Loew's Fox the week of May 25. This is the film that is said to wave the flag so vigorously on behalf of the present Administration that the Wall street bankers offered $800,000 to have it kept on the shelf—which, one suspects, is merely a double-sized serving of the old malarkey.

Rusticism on Broadway.

One learns, with some perturbation, from an obscure item in the New York press that the intrepid Messrs. Wee and Leventhal had the temerity to present Queenie Smith in Doty Hobart's comedy, "Every Thursday," in the Royale Theater, Forty-fifth street west of Broadway, in the City of New York, last night.

This, it will be recalled, is the fragile little romance of a New England slavey, whose love was unrequited, that played the Belasco Theater in this city the week of Monday, April 9, and won unstinted praise for Miss Smith, its star, but little, if any, for itself.

Unless the script has been pretty thoroughly overhauled in the intervening five weeks, one shudders to think of what the Broadway Death Watch may have done to the Hobart charade—barring, of course, a fraternal willingness to condone certain imperfections out of compliment to Robert Garland, dramatic critic of the World-Telegram, whose wife Miss Queenie Smith happens to be in private life.

Whatever alterations may have been made in the play since its Washington week, the cast remains practically intact, with Leon Janney, George Carleton, Ann Dere and Frederick Forrester still prominent among the principals and Sheila Trent still impersonating that gaudy lady of the pavements from over on the wrong side of the tracks, Miss Florence Amelia Elizabeth Lowell.

Perhaps by this time they are not only letting Miss Trent keep the $8, but also are permitting Miss Smith to keep Master Janney—which would be a great improvement over the ending of the play as it was presented here.

It is with regret that this is recorded as another week in which this column is falling far behind in its party-going. Not only were we compelled to forego the pleasure of the Tuesday night C. B. S. rout at the Willard in compliment to George Hall and his Radio Revue, playing Loew's Fox at the time, but similarly were precluded from helping to welcome Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon back to the Capital at the Carlton last night.

Miss Daniels and Mr. Lyon open at the Fox today and, even without having corroborated an earlier impression last evening, I give you my positive assurance that they will be found two of the most competent and most gracious stars ever to step out of Hollywood to grace a local stage.

But that is no help whatever in putting me abreast of my pretzels and doppelbrau.

"You Press the Button——"

If beauty contests seem to have lagged of late, the blondes, brunettes, bricktops and platinums now may take heart and begin to primp again.

According to announcement by Vice President Trem Carr—whom I always have suspected of adapting a nom du theatre from the British "tram car"—Monogram Pictures will conduct a Nation-wide photographic contest to select an "all-American beauty" to play a leading role in the production of "Women Must Dress," to be made next fall.

The contest provides for a 10-week contract in pictures for the winner and screen tests for 25 other contestants. The five foremost competitors for first honors will be taken to Hollywood for final judging by a committee that will include among its members such notables of the screen world as Cecil B. De Mille, Marion Gering, Norman Taurog, Norman McLeod, Mitchell Leisen, George White, George Melford, Charles B. Lang, Lee Garmes, Erich von Stroheim and Mr. Carr. Von Stroheim will act as chairman of the committee, which will be seen to include many distinguished directors, cameramen and beauty experts.

The contest actually got under way on May 1 and will continue until midnight September 15. It is estimated by those in charge that not less than 10,000,000 snapshots will be submitted by prospective eligibles during the period of the contest.

If all these contestants were placed end to end—it might be a swell idea to leave them that way!

That an artiste of the first rank can be kept pretty moderately busy in these slightly befuddled United States would seem to be exemplified with some clarity by the fact that when Katharine Cornell presents "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" and "Candida" in the Royal Alexandra Theater, in Toronto, Ont., May 17 to 19, it will be her first appearance outside the U. S. since she acted "Dishonored Lady" in the same city in November, 1930. Not that it matters.

"THE BLACK CAT." Universal picturization of a screen play by Edgar G. Ulmer and Peter Ruric, suggested by Edgar Allan Poe's story of the same name, co-starring Boris Karloff and Bela Lugosi, with Jacqueline Wells, David Manners and Egon Brecher. Directed by Edgar G. Ulmer. Reviewed Thursday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

Boris Karloff—Bela Lugosi—Edgar Allan Poe: the perfect set-up for the very apotheosis of thrillers! And in the presentation of "The Black Cat," the goal is missed by only a very slight margin.

But whatever may be lacking in thrills—and also "horror"—there is more than enough of suspense to suffice for the next couple of years. Indeed, "The Black Cat" resolves itself into a study in suspense, for there is very little in the way of narrative continuity to carry the work along.

The moment Bela Lugosi enters upon the scene, something is expected—something probably terrible, even horrible, yet at the same time uncannily fascinating. Things do happen in the ultra-modernistic castle of Boris Karloff, built upon the ruins of a war-time prison, yet nothing but what one is hoping would happen.

Masterpiece of Suspense.

Here, as in few other films, is created the suspense of impending disaster and that terrible sense of the utter futility of any attempt to prevent it.

Karloff, appearing as a cadaverous blend of the Frankenstein Monster and the Mummy, is a great architect gone mad on the subject of devil worship. Lugosi, playing a "straight" role, is a psychiatrist who returns to wreak vengeance on Mr. Karloff for the war-time stealing of his wife and daughter, and in that phase of his life has developed a pronounced monomaniacal streak.

Then follows a battle of wits—unbalanced, cruel, calculating wits—between the two, with David Manners and Jacqueline Wells the newly wedded couple falling into this maelstrom of abnormal passions. A beautiful study is "The Black Cat"—that is, beautiful in construction, development and camera treatment, even though the fundamental thesis be none too savory.

With such masters characterizing the mad, grewsome and horrible as Messrs. Karloff and Lugosi, little opportunity is afforded the remainder of the cast, not even the unwitting guests at the eerie stronghold of madness.

By the followers of such pictures as "Frankenstein," "The Mummy," "White Zombi," "Dracula" and others of like fabrication, "The Black Cat" will be wholeheartedly welcomed. But—if you can not stand suspense (the sort that lingers for about an hour after the close of the picture), our advice is to take your feline vicariously!

Starting to add notes of levity to the pall of the feature, the short subjects fall somewhat amiss. They are good shorts, however, and are headed by "Ed Sullivan Headliners," wherein the New York columnist is featured with Block and Sully, George Givot, Bid Gary and others. "The Gingerbread Man" by Oswald Rabbit's current contribution to cartoonal nursery lore. Universal News completes the program.

The Darrow Report.

It is fairly safe to assume that the Darrow report, if it had been published promptly, in its original form, would never have aroused the excitement created by its failure to appear. Unconfirmed rumors that the findings are to be suppressed or "toned down" have aroused senatorial critics of the NRA and have elicited unofficial outcries against censorship. As a matter of fact, the contents of the report, whatever they may be, seem much less important than the method of handling it.

Mr. Darrow's ultra-radical views are so well known that few people would be "shocked" by any hostile opinions that he may have indorsed in the much-discussed document. Unless he was made chairman of the national review board on the theory that the best way to disarm a hostile critic is to take him into the fold, the President must have been prepared for a report that would not follow conventional lines.

The aversion of the present Administration to outside criticism, even when offered in a friendly spirit, is well known. It is especially conspicuous in view of the experimental character of the emergency legislation and the professed desire of Government officials to profit by constructive suggestions. In this case, inside criticism has been invited, and there is no excuse for a refusal to deal with it openly and let the public judge whether it is justified. It is a sign of weakness and poor political strategy to suppress criticism, regardless of whether it may be justifiable.

Unless the mystery that surrounds the Darrow report is cleared up speedily, therefore, the public will conclude that there is a good deal to hide, and the report may have an influence out of all proportion to its real significance.

Prices And The Gold Policy.

Wholesale commodity prices as measured by the index of the Bureau of Labor have remained almost stationary since the beginning of February, fluctuating from week to week within a very narrow range. This lack of movement seems surprising in view of the increases in production costs due to codes and heavy Governmental expenditures which also tend to raise prices.

With all the influences that are at work to increase prices, however, resistance to advances is hard to overcome, because the public can not support a price rise so long as from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 people are without work. The shrinkage of purchasing power due to unemployment can not be offset, except to a very limited extent, by Government spending and make-work programs.

The current decline in textile prices, for instance, shows that production has outstripped effective consumer demand in this field and forced reductions. As a result the textile group index has descended to the low point of the current year. That situation helps to account for the slight recession in the general index for the week ended May 5. At that date, the index was 18.5 per cent above the level of the corresponding week in 1933, and over 23 per cent above the low point of March, 1933.

In view of the fact that the price of gold in dollars is 69 per cent higher than it was a year ago, the public may judge how ineffective the dollar devaluation policy has been in raising prices toward the level of 1926. If the price-raising activities of the NRA and the AAA are taken into account, the failure of the monetary policy to achieve its objective is even more striking than the statistical comparisons indicate.

The Song Racket.

Ever since prohibition made large-scale racketeering profitable the evil influence of the gun-toting racketeer has been felt in strange places. One would hardly expect, however, that it would affect the arts, even one of the seven lively arts. But Federal Attorney Amell, of Brooklyn, is authority for the statement that it has all but ruined a craft which once made fortunes for a type of popular artists. Racketeering, he says, has "wrecked the sheet music publishing industry."

New York parasites, worried because of stringent police activities for the suppression of the slot machine racket, have turned to the street sale of sheet music and are said to be "organizing" an extensive illegal business. One "big shot" is reported to have made more than $600 profit in one day. The popular song racket appears to be particularly attractive because there is no specific statute under which the person who does neither the printing, distributing nor selling can be prosecuted.

Sellers can be prosecuted in State courts for peddling without a license. Arresting such offenders does not break the racket, though. Printers, sellers and distributors can be prosecuted in Federal courts for violating the copyright law, but this offense is a misdemeanor. Conspiracy under Federal law is a felony, however, and it is on that basis that the Brooklyn attorney hopes to break up the newly organized song racket gang.

Officials fear that underworld warfare, shooting and killings may break out in the popular song industry if the racket is not stopped. Maybe that is the reason why so much of the current output of Tin Pan Alley appears to be a product of the jitters.

Retreat Of The NRA.

Reports are current that the NRA officials are planning to concentrate their efforts upon a limited number of major industries and abandon attempts to administer codes for intrastate businesses and service industries, such as cleaning and dyeing establishments, hotels, restaurants and barber shops. Such a change of policy would undoubtedly be a wise move from the point of view of the NRA, because nothing is more damaging to official prestige than to attempt the impossible.

When the recovery act was passed it was apparent that its success would depend upon the extent of the cooperation given by private industry. No Federal bureaucratic organization could hope to frame, supervise and give effect to hundreds of codes covering previously unorganized groups and embracing thousands of small local units. It was more or less taken for granted also that the power of Federal regulation could not constitutionally be extended to cover intrastate business.

On the other hand, many of the country's basic industries were already strongly organized on a National basis. They were in a position to cooperate with the Federal authorities in framing codes of fair practice and doing the necessary work of policing to prevent violation of agreements. When the NRA set out, therefore, to cover intrastate industries—despite grave doubts of the legality of its procedure—and to impose all sorts of general restrictions upon unwilling business groups, it was a foregone conclusion that these efforts would end in failure. Meantime the constructive work which the NRA was capable of undertaking has necessarily suffered from a dissipation of official energy.

The original error made by launching an overambitious project will not be easily repaired, because great emphasis has been placed upon the value of the NRA in raising minimum wages, reducing hours and protecting sweated labor. Unfortunately, some of the worst instances of exploitation of labor are found in the service industries and in local businesses which the NRA has been unable to discipline. However, the existence of such evils will not be obviated by vesting in the Federal authorities powers that they can not effectively exercise. There is even less warrant for Federal intervention to determine the charges and the trade practices of local business. If small intrastate industries need to be reformed the remedy should be locally supplied and some mechanism devised to enlist community cooperation. In order to be of lasting benefit to the country's industries the NRA must confine its program to attainable objectives, which meet with the approbation and enlist the cooperation of the industries concerned.

Rising Above Prejudice.

Although the House indulged in a partisan controversy over the air-mail issue, it has passed a bill which goes a long way toward rescuing this branch of the mail service from the political bog into which it was plunged by Postmaster General Farley. Without attempting to condemn any one, or to rebuke Mr. Farley for his bungling, the House proposes to establish a commission to investigate the broad problems of aviation before permanent legislation concerning the air mail shall be enacted.

In some respects this bill is similar to that passed by the Senate. Yet in important particulars it is very different. The Senate bill would stigmatize all the former carriers as corrupt agencies which tried to defraud the Government. To avoid embarrassment for Mr. Farley it would virtually write his policy of condemnation without trial into the law. Former carriers would be rendered ineligible to bid for temporary contracts, regardless of whether or not they have ever violated the law.

Under the House bill all this flummery would be eliminated. Every company would be permitted to bid for contracts running for one year, and in the meantime a presumably nonpartisan body would attempt to formulate a new air-mail policy. Moreover, the companies whose contracts were canceled would be given an unquestioned right to have their case reviewed in court.

From another viewpoint the Senate bill is entirely unsatisfactory. It contains a considerable body of permanent air-mail legislation, in spite of the fact that its chief purpose seems to be creation of an expert body to study that subject. The question of giving the Interstate Commerce Commission regulatory powers over aviation transport lines ought to be carefully studied. That agency is devoted almost entirely to the regulation of railroads. The question of reorganizing the ICC so that its jurisdiction might be properly extended over all agencies of transportation is thus involved in the air mail dispute between the Senate and House. If an investigating body is to be appointed, certainly a decision on this important point should be postponed until its findings are available.

The superiority of the House bill is beyond question. That body has been less involved in the air-mail fracas and therefore has been less prejudiced in its action. Since Administration leaders in the Senate have already manifested their devotion to the party chieftain who is serving as Postmaster General, they might well permit fair play and the welfare of the air-mail service to influence their policy when the House bill reaches the conference committee and the floor of the Senate.

Politics Vs. Public Service.

Interest in the unsavory alliance between politics and the Federal service is revived by passage through the Senate of a bill designed to keep Government officials out of the National political conventions. If this measure should become law "no person holding an appointive office of trust or profit under the Government" could serve as an officer, delegate or alternate in any political convention for the nomination of Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates. Presidents would no longer be able to exercise too great an influence upon a convention through Federal officeholders.

This measure may be of considerable importance, yet it seems to approach the central problem from the wrong direction. It would curb one phase of political activity by politicians in the Government service, instead of curbing the appointment of political chieftains to important executive offices. For example, Postmaster General Farley, who is also chairman of the Democratic National Committee, would apparently be forbidden to serve his party in the next National convention. But nothing in this measure would in any way interfere with his continued efforts to direct the work of the Postoffice Department and the Democratic party.

Any attempt to divorce politics from administrative positions is, of course, futile. When a President is elected through the efforts of a political party it is only natural that he should choose his chief advisers from the ranks of that organization. Apprehension over current practices is not concerned with this the exercise of prerogative of the President. Rather it is concerned with the appointment of active party officials to prominent administrative posts and the intrusion of politics into the selection of employes for minor positions that should be awarded solely on the basis of merit and efficiency.

The problem, therefore, is not one of eliminating politics, but of keeping politics in a proper place. Even though members of the dominant party are selected for the administrative positions, it can not be said that the interests of the public, which the Government serves, are identical with the interests of the party in power. Most of the criticism which has been aimed at the present Administration in this connection is based on its failure to maintain this line of demarcation.

White Oaks Of Gorsuch.

White oaks planted before the Revolutionary War on the old Gorsuch farm near Baltimore are being felled, and soon there will be electricity in the home of Dorsey Mitchell. It took the Mitchell family four years to decide this momentous question. At last the aged Mrs. Rebecca Frances Gorsuch Mitchell has given her consent to let the woodsmen do their worst. Hence, oak trees covering three acres will be shipped to England for the furniture trade.

John Gorsuch, great-great-grandfather of Mrs. Mitchell and the original white owner of this land, may have said when he planted those saplings that some day they would be worth a pile of money. But as they grew they become not so much potential wealth as the proud possession of the family. Like so many things that are started for profit, they were protected and loved merely because they were tangible signs of ownership. What wealth there might be in these oaks was always something for the future.

The old colonial house, the three acres of white oaks with tradition weighting down each branch, the old lady, her two daughters, her son—John Galsworthy would have known how to explain the reluctance they felt at seeing the trees go down. He would have shown them looking at the trees, looking at the house to which no wires stretched from the roadway. He would have made understandable the longing on the part of the younger ones to have what the neighbors had. He would have shown the grande dame, sitting in the flickering candle light, living on memories of others, now dead, who had played and worked beneath the leaves of the white oaks.

The conflicts, the emotions, the sentiment, and above all the sense of proud possession in the mere ownership of those fine, tall trees, are elements which the artist molds into drama. But after all drama is only intensification of human experiences that are real. When a patch of oak trees that have outlived four generations in one family are finally turned over to the woodsman so that that family can live as others do, in an age when candles and kerosene—and acres of oaks—are but relics of a long forgotten past, the touch of the artist may be superfluous.

Scientists are engaged in weighing the earth. We offer odds that they find it wanting.

"A Question of Justice."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial in the May 9 issue of The Post entitled "A Question of Justice", relating to Mr. Mellon, is very impressive as well as the editorials from several leading journals you published on May 10.

I am minded of a story told years ago of an Irishman who was sitting on the fence of a bull pen, safe from all danger, laughing as though the funniest thing in the world was happening. An acquaintance came along and noting the Irishman's hilarity and hoping perhaps to share in a few smiles, at least, asked, "What are you laughing at, Pat?" Patrick paused long enough to reply, "I'm going to get into that pen in a few minutes and take that bull by the tail and swing him around a little." After having indulged himself over the prospect sufficiently of the bull's mortification-to-be, Pat climbed down into the pen and grabbed the tail of the bull. In an instant the bull reversed the charge and the next second Pat described a semi-circle in the air and landed outside the pen. He picked himself up, shook the dust from his eyes and said reflectively, "Well it's a darned good thing I did my laughing first."

Our Attorney General began his laugh March 10 and had a fine time of it for two months over the prospect of the terrible things he was about to do to the former Secretary of the Treasury. It seems a most brazen thing for him to do, when, after the Pittsburgh grand jury had thrown his ex parte evidence out of the window, to have accused Mr. Mellon of having issued his defense just before the grand jury was to meet and to have called it improper. It is supposed he thought Mr. Mellon should have stood and "taken it."

JUST AN OBSERVER.

Rights of Pedestrian.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With reference to news items and editorials in connection with dangerous traffic conditions here, it seems to me the answer can be easily found if the officials want it. They need only to take a walk down the street and note the absolute indifference to the rights of others shown by the drivers. This is due, of course, to the fact they know they will not be arrested for violations, and this feeling of security is based upon knowledge that the traffic system here is built up on the idea that the most important thing in the world is the speeding up of traffic on our streets, regardless of the danger element. There will be no improvement so long as officials refuse to protect pedestrians and careful drivers in their rights, for fear it will slow down traffic.

As to pedestrians crossing at other than cross-walks, they have been driven to do this by traffic officials permitting drivers to bull their way around corners, forcing pedestrians to remain on the walk or take chances on being killed while asserting their rights. The remedy is not in more strict examination of applicants but in the appointment of a few more Sinclairs. The worst offenders on the streets are those who could drive an auto through the eye of a needle—and are continually trying it. As to killed pedestrians being responsible for the accidents—it is the word of the killer against that of the dead. What a pathetic record!

DRIVER AND PEDESTRIAN.
Washington, May 10.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It may surprise the operators of motor vehicles, as well as the traffic director, to learn that the pedestrian has the right of way on a street or highway over motor vehicles. These are basic rights derived from the common law, and these rights have been modified and revised only slightly by statutory enactment, and can not be abrogated by ordinary traffic regulations.

In the District of Columbia the law has been clearly expressed by the District Court of Appeals to the effect that when a pedestrian steps off the curb to cross the street, and faces a green "go" signal light, he has the undisputed right to continue to the further curb without his movement being interrupted or his right of way invaded by any vehicle.

This rule of law has been uniformly followed by the courts in general. A Minnesota case has held that a pedestrian crossing a street intersection against a red light, is not guilty of contributory negligence, and the automobile driver who hits him is solely to blame.

On the assumption then, that the majority of pedestrians killed at street intersections in Washington had the exclusive right to the position occupied by them when they were struck by an automobile, where does the blame for the loss of life lie?

Traffic Director Van Duzer has recently stated in the public press that traffic accidents are caused by "dumb pedestrians." Therefore, because a pedestrian attempts to assert the rights granted him by law, that pedestrian is "dumb."

The facts would be more correctly stated by an admission that the Traffic Bureau is not functioning as required by law. There is hardly an instance of a left-hand turn made on a busy street intersection, that the pedestrians' rights are not invaded, and the law violated by automobile drivers. A large percentage of automobiles making a left-hand turn are driven directly through a safety zone at such intersections, yet police stand mute while observing these law violations.

DUMB PEDESTRIAN,
Washington, May 10.

Relief Roll Shut-Ins.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I write in behalf of the less unfortunate ones on relief roll. I have been reading about the grafting and the underserving on relief roll.

Allow me to say, that there can be no grafting among the shut-in ones on relief roll. We are at the mercy of anything that the Government may do for us. Some of our physical conditions are beyond determination. We do not wish to have you think that we are ungrateful, but we can not make it when the case-workers put us off a month without anything to go upon.

The time has come when well people can not keep a room in someone else's house without being able to pay at some time or other. As for me, will it be cheaper for the Government to care for me at the Home for the Aged and Infirm? If so I shall be glad to make my departure.

AN INVALID.
Washington, May 9.

Federal Firearm Monopoly.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Referring to your editorial, "Hysterics No Cure," please permit me to state that of the numerous laws recently passed or proposed in Congress for the curtailment of crime, not one, it seems to me, goes to the root of the great evil afflicting society. Why in the name of common sense should criminals be permitted to arm themselves with the latest firearms, bullet-proof vests, &c., equal, if not better, than the Army, Navy or law-enforcing officer?

At heart nearly every crook is a coward. He must have a loaded firearm, and possibly "dope" to bolster bravado, and give him a measure of courage to commit crimes against his fellow men. All the bravado behind the arch crook, Dillinger, is the machine gun, which is protecting him right now, which drives good citizens to hysterics and jeopardizes the lives of law-enforcing officers. Why not hold the manufacturer and the seller of such dangerous weapons equally guilty with the criminal who buys them and has them in his possession? Good citizens are lamenting curtailment of their liberties, but that is nothing what the future has in store for us, if we can not control crime.

We are heading fast toward the European system of registration and identification of every individual, which means reporting to local police authorities when leaving place of abode and upon arrival at new destination, to enable authorities to tell the sheep from the goat. May I not suggest that you use the great influence of The Post, which has been so splendidly rejuvenated under the able direction of the Hon. Eugene Meyer, and work for a Government monopoly of the making and handling of all firearms, as well as all war supplies in general, which will help us not only to control crime that is undermining our civilization, but will also take the profit out of war and clear us of hypocrisy—preaching peace to all the world, while our gun and ammunition factories are ever ready to flood the world with material for destruction.

Commending Post Hikes.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I counted 74 participants in The Post's hiking party on May 6 and strolled and chatted with 18 of the women, and seven offered to share part of their luncheons with me. One of them told me that for 25 preceding Sundays of her stay in Washington she had been desperately lonely because she shyly stayed in her room, a stranger in the Nation's Capital, where thousands unfortunately remain strangers.

Three successive Sundays I have joined The Post hikes, doing about 8, 6 or 7 miles as the group route, and later similar distances alone.

Out with an aggregate of some 190 persons for a total of about 18 hours, I neither heard nor saw vulgarity, saw no hip flask nor heard any reference to booze, heard no smart profanity and saw but four individuals smoking. Excepting the leader, I do not know the name of any one who has shared in these very wholesome opportunities for natural and informal divertissement in pleasant environment. May I, as an outdoors Californian commend these Post hikes to many who are not consciously on dress parade or apprehensively on their dignity?

As Others See It.

Recommended Reading.

A refreshing bit of advice to teachers which might profitably be taken by others also is given by Supt. Campbell of this city. Speaking before the annual convention of the National Education Association's Department of Superintendence at Cleveland, he did not urge a wider perusal of books on educational psychology, or on progressive pedagogy, or on adolescent abnormalities. Doubtless Dr. Campbell would grant the usefulness of books on these subjects, but he had a suggestion which was original and—what original suggestions are sometimes conspicuously not—apt.

He recommended the reading of the judicial opinions of Justices Brandeis, Holmes, Cardozo and Stone, who, by applying ancient truths to our modern civilization, "became the prophets of the New Deal." He might have added that in the pronouncements of these men, teachers would find the critical attitude, joined with open-mindedness, which it is their task to exemplify and to instill, and with these qualities a clearness and crispness of literary form with which pupils cannot become too well acquainted.

Former Justice Holmes has occasionally performed the impossible by injecting a bit of humor into one of his profound opinions. If there was ever a time when, to save its sanity, the world needed a sense of humor more than now, history has kept it dark.

The Post Impressionist

Old Lamps For New.

Postoffice, Saturday.

"SOMEBODY," we said, "has been trying to rewrite Shakespeare."

We were turning the pages of a new book. It spoke of "the way of dogs to bay the moon," and there leaped to mind Shakespeare's dog with that same vocal habit. The new book told of "seas of trouble," and we remembered Hamlet's "sea of troubles." We remembered Hamlet when this new book asked: "Think you to look upon his like again?" Portia pleaded that "the quality of mercy is not strained," but "droppeth like the gentle rain from heaven." Yet here we were reading:

"And the parchel lips that crave
God's gentle mercy, He will lave
With drops from heaven."

A new book? It was published only this week. But it is a translation. It is a translation from Moses Ibn Ezra, who was born in Granada about 500 years before Shakespeare was born at Stratford.

These similarities are, of course, verbal coincidences. One of them depends upon a disputed reading of the text. Nevertheless, they serve to catch the casual eye and hold it for beauties that the long arm of chance did not seize and repeat.

With the Moorish conquest of Spain, in 711, there arose, and continued for half a millenium, a Jewish literature on the Iberian peninsula, which all except scholars have too much neglected. During the Babylonian captivity, the vernacular of the Jewish masses had become Aramaic. Now, even in their non-religious songs, their poets returned to Hebrew, yet eventually added the rules of Arabic versification, thus developing the graces of rhyme and metre. The four masters of the later period were Samuel the Prince, Solomon Idn Gabirol, Judah Halevi and our pre-Shakespeare Shakespearean Moses Ibn Ezra, who died in 1139.

Selections from Gabirol and Halevi, with translations by Israel Zangwill and Nina Davis Salaman, have been issued by the Jewish Publication Society through the Jacob H. Schiff endowment. To these are now added "Selected Poems of Moses Ibn Ezra," edited and annotated by Dr. Heinrich Brody and translated into English verse by Solomon Solis-Cohen. Dr. Brody is one of the foremost authorities on the period in question; Dr. Cohen, eminent as a physician, is also well known as a translator and, if we may introduce such a phrase in such a connection, as "a poet on his own." His work in the present instance combines the sympathy of the enthusiast with the fellow-feeling of the artist.

Moses Ibn Ezra wrote about everything. He wrote about nature and friendship, about love and wine. He wrote much devotional poetry—indeed, he was known as "The Poet of Contrition" because of the numerous hymns and prayers of penitence which he contributed to the ritual of his faith. He wrote about all that a man does write about whose interests are the interests of mankind.

Although his later years were passed in poverty and distress, he was born into a family wealthy and powerful. His forbears held positions of influence at the Moorish Court. He was thoroughly versed in the science of his time and knew his Greek and Latin as well as his Arabic and Hebrew. Then, when Granada fell before that fanatic Moslem sect called the Almoravides, he was driven into exile.

According to Heine's poem, "Jehuda ben Halevy," Ibn Ezra, on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, was captured and enslaved by Tartars, but "sang so sweetly" that he softened the Khan's heart and won freedom. Dr. Cohen thinks there may be foundation for this legend: "One of Ibn Ezra's letters, which has been preserved, speaks of his forced detention in a mountain fastness."

Did he, faring eastward thus, meet his contemporary Omar Khayyam?

For Shakespeare is not the only poet with whom Ibn Ezra has certain poetical relationships. Remember your Rubaiyat; then read these stanzas of "The Hebrew Omar:"

Drink! Whilst the rain-drenched earth for summer yearns,
And shivering forests dream that spring returns,
The ruby wine glows in its crystal cup
Like flame of God within the hall that burns . . .

All they that live on earth are niggardly
Beside the vintner's gracious alchemy;
He takes your bits of silver—speaks—behold,
Your cups are running o'er with liquid gold!

There is a stanza of Ibn Ezra's which was once translated:

Omar dwells at the end of the
His songs go out to its uttermost borders:
Far in the East he mingles the
spiceries of his song,
Far in the West I inhale their fragrance.

Dr. Brody insists that the first word of this stanza was smudged in the Hebrew manuscript and should really be "kama," meaning "there are" or "there is," so the doubtful line would read: "There is one who dwells at the end of the world." Dr. Cohen makes it run: "Though the poet dwell at the end of the world."

But there are those Omaresque stanzas previously quoted. And couldn't the "one" or "the poet" just as well be Omar Khayyam as somebody else?

We like to think so, anyway!

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

WELL, sir, it was a thrill that comes once in a lifetime—the feeling I had the other day when I read that Gen. Johnson had declared an emergency in the ice house at Macon, Ga. The story read that an emergency had been declared in the ice industry there but that is just the same as to say the ice house.

It's an honor of some kind, the exact nature of which I don't know. But it seems that Mr. Roosevelt has declared an emergency over the country as a whole and that some of his subordinates have come to awarding smaller emergency degrees. Mr. Ickes awarded one to the oil industry some time ago and only a few days before Gen. Johnson made the bestowal upon the Macon ice plant, he similarly honored the tire industry, declaring an emergency existed in it. It may be that it is a move to break the Nation-wide or Presidential emergency down into smaller units, to have instead of one big emergency, a lot of little emergencies, a decentralization of the emergency, so to speak.

BARGERON.

Whatever is behind it all, it thrills me more than I can tell that the old home town ice house is one of the first units to be recognized. I can't help thinking how close I have been to fame. It just bears out the old adage that no one is a prophet in his home town.

Why, we used to consider that ice house a ne'er-do-well. It was on the other side of the railroad tracks and the better element was never permitted to play with it. In those days it seemed to have no ambition. Its sawdust and croker sacks were unclean and its ammonia ill-smelling. Gosh, to think it had the stuff in it after all!

• • • •

I am not trying to disparage it by digging up its past in this way. I am simply trying to emphasize the credit it deserves. It never had the advantages of other ice houses. I doubt it has ever been to an ice house convention in its life. Looking back now, however, it did have a good ice house mind and unquestionably it had some good ice house blood in its veins. It must have had a good ice house mother or father, not wealthy ones but substantial ice house folk who were God-fearing and who paid their bills. Blood will always tell. I am glad to see this old ice house make good, I declare I am.

It will be funny now how the people will act who used to high hat it. They will come running from the other side of the tracks gibbering about how they always knew this ice house would make good. They will try to get it to make a speech at the Rotary Club.

• • • •

Old Macon has turned out some right good ones in her day; Mark Etheridge, Young Stribling and Blanton Winship. But the old ice house—to her has come such an honor as might well make the community swell up and burst.

There will be detractors, of course, who will say that such recognition as this would have never come had not Mr. Roosevelt been in the White House. I don't believe he had a thing to do with it. I believe the Macon ice house got this award on its merits, by dint of hard work and little play.

When I think of that old ramshackle thing, staying open late on Saturday nights and closing on Sundays, with its squeaking wagons and poorly-fed horses, with its unregulated weighing scales—when I think that from this lowly beginning it has come to be a concern of the United States Government, my heart fills with warmth and tears come to my eyes.

An emergency in the ice "industry" at Macon! Hot dog! But wait—there is something ominous in that term "industry." I wonder if it is getting snooty already and calling itself that. An ice house is what it is. I am proud of it, though, snooty or not. It has grown up and married the banker's daughter.

Norfolk Lodge Men Hope to Meet Roosevelt.

Norfolk, Va., May 11 (Spl.).—Announcement was made today that Norfolk Lodge, No. 1, A. F. and A. M., oldest Masonic lodge in the United States, will resume this year its annual excursion to Washington. The trips were discontinued after 1929.

Virginia Board Turns Down Hospital Audit

Refuses to Ask Peery Action on DeJarnette Sanatorium.

Staunton, Va., May 11 (AP).—The General State Hospital Board defeated by a 5-to-3 vote a motion, offered at its meeting here yesterday, to ask Gov. George C. Peery to order an audit of the DeJarnette Sanatorium, operated as a branch of the Western State Hospital, near here.

The board elected Shirley Carter, of Winchester, chairman, succeeding Arthur W. James, resigned.

The motion to ask for the audit was introduced by Dr. James K. Hall, of Richmond, a member of the general board and head of Westbrook, a private sanatorium. He asked the board to vote for an audit of the DeJarnette institution "from its construction to the present date." Dr. Hall was active in a move to defeat a bill intended to assure the operation of the sanatorium when it was introduced at the recent session of the State Legislature. Associated with him was Dr. J. C. King, of Radford, also connected with a private institution.

The board approved a resolution, introduced by Mr. Carter, to authorize a committee formed of the chairman and five superintendents to confer with the governor, the attorney general and the State purchasing agent regarding a ruling placing a processing tax on flour and other necessities used by hospitals.

A communication to M. S. Burchard, director of the Federal Transient Service Bureau in the State, was read to the board, in which he agreed to pay transportation costs, per item costs for care and clothing costs of transients taken into State hospitals without commitment, for short periods of observation. Dr. Hall asked if hospitals could be made liable for detaining such persons and the chairman assured him they would not be. He said such observation periods would be classed as voluntary service.

Charleston, W. Va., May 11 (Spl.). James B. McLaughlin, State commissioner of agriculture, today announced that the seed, pathological and chemistry laboratories operated by the State Department of Agriculture at Morgantown would be moved to Charleston June 1.

He announced that Dr. E. N. Moore, now assistant to Dr. J. H. Reitz at the laboratories, would have charge of them after their removal. Dr. Reitz will remain as an instructor in the college of agriculture at the State university.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

U. S. CONTROL OF DRINKING.

The Methodist East Conference proposes that the United States Government take over the liquor and beer industries. It advocates National control of hiccoughs.

• • • •

The Methodists urge that Uncle Sam take over all breweries and distilleries. This is the first intimation that there is any group in America which doesn't think the Government's headache is big enough.

• • • •

The proposition presumably anticipates a day when Congress will stand behind every bottle.

• • • •

One of the results of Government ownership of distilleries not unpleasant to anticipate might be the scrapping of all those curious labels and the floating of all whisky under the name of "Old Yankee Doodle—Bottled in Bond."

• • • •

With the breweries turning out nothing but "Liberty Beer."

• • • •

Such a simplification of brands would be necessary under Federal operation unless the Government wanted to invite a revolution. No drinker would want to wait four or five months for a glass of beer while Congress tried to decide on a type of bottle and a good label.

• • • •

Can you imagine having a doctor's prescription for whisky and being unable to get it because Huey Long was filibustering to block the adoption of a suitable bottle cap?

• • • •

The picture is too horible to contemplate. With Government ownership of the liquor and beer industries there would have to be a new Cabinet post to be known as the Secretary of Drinking.

• • • •

And an entire bureau known as the Department of Headaches.

• • • •

From that it would be a logical step to a National Bureau for the Supervision of Mornings After.

• • • •

A few barrels of inadequate beer might wreck any Administration, and the war cry in any campaign might be "Put a Better Grade of Hops in the White House!"

• • • •

There would even be instances of a party being driven out of office because its beer delivery system was unsatisfactory.

• • • •

And it would always be a great National question whether our drinks were better under the Republicans or under the Democrats.

Ban on Reckless Drivers Demanded

Rising Death Toll Alarms Jury in Baltimore.

Baltimore, May 11 (Spl.).—Citing the rising death toll from automobile accidents throughout Maryland, the retiring grand jury today recommended that periodic reregistration of all auto operators in Maryland be ordered so that those incapable of driving safely be barred from the roads.

"It is essential that the irresponsible driver of any type be removed from our traffic lanes," the report said, "in order that the life, limb and property of the essentially unoffending motorist and equally unoffending pedestrian may be protected or conserved."

The majority of persons accused in traffic court here of drunken driving were dismissed in the seven-month period from September 1 to March 21, the report said.

SUMNER WELLES, Assistant Secretary of State. Former U. S. Ambassador to Cuba. Hit the front pages for his near single-handed quelling of Cuba's recent outburst. But before the ink had dried on the pages the lid blew off again. Consequently echoes are still heard over question of his "coup" and real wisdom of his role during upheaval; wiseacres contend he backed horse of wrong color while others say that he kept his head in midst of confusion and turmoil. Net result: Large measure of status quo ante has been restored with undercurrents seething as uncertain as before. Patrician. Harvard raised and groomed. Born New York City 41 years ago. Held numerous Latin-American diplomatic posts. With advent of New Deal yearned for Undersecretaryship of State. Got Assistant Secretaryship. Ascetic, shy. Is distant and formal but commands respect, admiration and devotion of those really close to him.

Such a large proportion of those who have been pictured by Mr. Robles have asked for the originals that The Washington Post is saving all these drawings to honor the requests of any future members of "The National Gallery."

Another Letter From a Dad to His Red-Headed Daughter

By Robert Quillen

My dear Louise: I am sure you believe in the Golden Rule. Almost everybody does. But believing in it doesn't help the world much unless you are also thoughtful enough to apply it.

Years ago I stepped into a bank just in time to hear an irate and apoplectic merchant berate the cashier because of some error in his account.

There were numbers of people in the lobby and the cashier could do nothing but look down his nose and suffer. He was a well-bred fellow, with the instincts of a gentleman, and I felt sorry for him.

When the people had gone out he turned to me with a wry grin and said: "If ever you have to bawl me out, please do it when there's nobody else present."

Some days later I entered the bank again. Again there were numpers of people in the lobby. But this time the shoe was on the other foot.

The cashier had a grievance. And in the hearing of all those people he lifted his voice and informed me with some heat that my newspaper had made a mistake in his advertisement.

I mention the incident to show you how easy it is to forget the Golden Rule when you have the upper hand.

If experience is the only teacher, you missed part of your education. The few spankings you got were administered in private, and never once were you scolded in public.

Because you escaped it, you can't realize how the soul of a sensitive youngster sickens with shame when he is punished in the presence of his friends—or other people he must face again. But I assure you that he suffers, and all people suffer when similarly shamed in public.

It is poor sportsmanship to berate those who dare not answer in kind, and doubly cruel to do it in public.

Remember that all your days and the world's underdogs will bless you for it.

If good fortune places you in a position of authority, good breeding obligates you not to abuse it. There is still such a thing as noblesse oblige, and the bigger the man the more gentle he must be. Love,

DAD.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

Alan Villiers.

Almost every normal, healthy boy at one time or another wants to run away to sea. I can remember when I fully intended to do this, and might have done so, only I discovered that to be a real sea captain one must be proficient in mathematics. This cooled my enthusiasm, and I have been a landlubber ever since.

Innumerable stories, true and imaginary, are written about the men who go down to the sea in ships; they have a perennial interest. But I think that of all the living writers on this theme, the best is the young Australian, Alan J. Villiers. He was born at Melbourne in 1903, and went before the mast as a boy, and has had many hair-breadth escapes from shipwreck, drowning, fire and various casualties. But his heart is forever with the sailing-ships. When he was 22 he produced his first book, "Whaling in the Frozen South."

Then he began to take part in a continuous series of long-distance racing from Australia to England, by way of Cape Horn. In the first voyage of this kind he kept a daily journal, and after his arrival in Great Britain he wrote his first book to attract general attention—"Falmouth for Orders."

But it was in 1930 that he took his place among the foremost writers of the sea. In a tragic voyage from Australia to Queenstown, that lasted from April to September, in 1929, on the sailing-ship Grace Harwar, where his best friend was killed and the second mate went insane, Mr. Villiers managed to take a good many motion pictures in appalling difficulties, and I regard his story of this voyage, "By Way of Cape Horn," as having every prospect of becoming an imperishable classic. It is the best book of the sea that I have read, with the one exception of "Two Years Before the Mast."

No man alive knows sailing ships by actual experience better than Alan Villiers; since 1929, he has twice won the great race from Australia to England. In 1932 he won, covering the 18,000 miles in exactly 5 hours better than his nearest rival; making the whole distance in 104 days. But in 1933 he won again, this time shattering all records, by making the voyage in 88 days.

As evidence that luxuries have not killed the spirit of adventure in the modern American boy, whenever it is announced that Mr. Villiers is making plans for another voyage around the Horn, he is overwhelmed with applications from boys of 16 who are eager to undergo the hardships of common sailors.

Mr. Villiers is not only a seaman; he is a literary artist.

Nixon Acquitted In House Deaths

Cumberland Man Guilty on Liquor Charge.

Cumberland, Md., May 11 (Spl.). Eugeen P. Nixon, charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Ira Crabtree and Joseph Lechliter, when the house he occupied was destroyed in January, was found not guilty by a full bench of the Circuit Court today, but was convicted on an indictment of manufacture and possession of liquor without a license.

He was sentenced to two years in the Maryland House of Correction, to pay a fine of $1,000, and to six months in jail. The jail sentence will be dropped if the fine is paid.

In connection with the manslaughter case, the State sought to show that the house was wrecked by the explosion of a boiler in connection with the operation of a still. The defense held that the house collapsed under the weight of a tile roof, estimated to have weighed 8 tons. Nixon's wife and young daughter were injured in the collapse.

Blue Law Faces Test in Virginia

Slot Machine Ban Also to Be Ruled Upon.

Richmond, May 11 (AP).—Two cases of State-wide interest will be heard before Judge John L. Ingram in Hustings court here next month. Both are test cases—one to test Virginia's half-century old Sunday "blue law" as it affects Sunday baseball, and the other to determine the rights of municipalities in driving out slot machines.

Roger K. Gilbert has appealed a $5 fine on a charge of operating a slot machine, in a "friendly" test case arranged by Commonwealth's Attorney T. Gray Haddon.

Manager Ed Hendee, of the Richmond Colts, likewise has appealed a $5 fine on a Sunday baseball charge.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall

WHAT worries me in this job, business, profession, art or general ruckus of book-reviewing is the fact that if I once miss a book there will never be a chance this side of a pensioned old age to go back and read it. The new books come in like herrings on a spring tide (I trust my natural history is not at fault), and all I can say is sufficient unto the day are the books thereof.

For example, Stella Gibbons' "Cold Comfort Farm," of which I've heard the very pleasantest things, escaped me. All I have for solace is her latest novel, "Bassett" (Longmans, $2), and rather diluted joy I find in it. For one thing, the book splits apart as neatly as the two halves of an English walnut. One side is concerned with Miss Hilda Baker, a rather faded but plucky middle-aged spinster, who is fired after 21 years in a London West End paper-pattern shop and takes her savings down into the town of Bassett, Bucks, to set up a boarding house with another spinster. Miss Baker's sole passion is to sniff out "sauce," as she calls it, and to deal with such examples of impudence as they deserve. Her talents in this are considerable. The brightest moment comes when she discharges two saucy servants and bandies words with them after the best Billingsgate tradition.

THEO. HALL.

The other side of the tale leaps blithely to Bell and George Shelling, charming, wealthy, and ineffectual brother and sister, who happen also to live in Bassett. George falls in love with his mother's young companion and forsakes her weakly when Bell, calmly jealous, takes charge of things. Our sympathies are all for Queenie, which I'm afraid is the name of the companion.

Either sequence would have made a good tale in itself. Miss Gibbons' talents evidently lie more in a neat pinning down of certain English manners than in literary architecture. But I suppose I should be glad to get two stories for the eyestrain of one.

• • • •

Further, I missed Ann Bridge's prize-winning novel, "Peking Picnic." From hints gathered here and there, I take it this is something of a reprieve. But I am not quite convinced, for I enjoyed her follow-up book, "The Ginger Griffin" (Little Brown, $2.50), and I can not, from its interior unevenness, believe this book a total improvement over the first. It's a tale of an English girl named Amber Harrison who goes out to China to mend a broken heart and succeeds in overdoing it, to the titillation of all properly light-minded readers. High society in Peking makes a background which should give Alexander Woollcott another stroke of nostalgia. A very decent amount of wit provides the seasoning.

• • • •

Nor did I read Elizabeth Cambridge's "Hostages to Fortune," choice of the English Book Society last June. Now comes her second novel, "The Sycamore Tree" (Putnam, $2.50)—and almost, O Caesar, thou persuadest me! For it's a rarely delicate and able piece of writing, though draped on the not too original plan of a man's life from school days to middle age. The hero suffers from the trouble which afflicted Soames Forsyte—he's a bit thick-skinned, but not enough so to be ignorant of his unsuccess with other people. All is cured in the end, however.

• • • •

Eric Hatch's "Road Show" (Little Brown, $2) is going to lead me straight to his first novel, "Five Days"—if I have any persistence. Not in a long while have I met such a cheery piece of cock-eyed farce, a tale built around an amazing caravan show run by Drogo "Plunger" Gaines, late of Wall Street, and Col. Carraway, all white walrus and benignity, both of them fresh from a sojourn in what we politely call the booby hatch. A pleasant young torch singer, and a lady named Penguin Calliope Bird, who sells lingerie, add to the gaiety.

• • • •

Now that I've got this far in my multiple confession, I'd best make a clean breast of the fact that the 300,000-odd readers of "Anthony Adverse" march solidly without me. My default in this apparently crucial matter may not be laid at the door of apathy. For I never get beyond the basic problem of finding an evening in which to tackle 1,200 pages.

At this point I seem to hear a faint and acid query from several sides—did I just learn to read in the last six months?

Deal Will Not Run In Norfolk Race

To Support Ticket Opposed to Organization.

Norfolk, Va., May 11 (Spl.).—Joseph T. Deal, former Representative in Congress from this district, bitter foe of Senator Harry F. Byrd and the Virginia Democratic machine, today announced he would not be a candidate for the city council in the June election, but will support a ticket opposed to the organization slate.

The Deal ticket is composed of Charles E. Jenkins, Len B. East, George R. Abott and Ezra T. Summers. They will oppose Mayor W. R. D. Taylor, Hugh L. Butler, J. D. Wood and Dr. J. W. Reed, recognized as the organization candidates. The organization here is led by W. L. Prieur, clerk of the courts and first lieutenant on Byrd's political staff.

Mr. Deal said he had decided not to enter the race for office for himself, but that he would be heard from in the campaign. His campaign for the Democratic nomination for Governor last year was unsuccessful, but he carried Norfolk by a majority of about 900.

Fisher Strike Closes Buick; 19,000 Out

Spread of Trouble Seen as Union Calls on Chevrolet Men.

Flint, Mich., May 11 (AP).—Eighteen hours after union employes of the Fisher Body Corporation Plant No. 1 walked out, the Buick Motor Co. plant was shut down today, throwing 14,000 men out of work at least until Tuesday.

There was no explanation from Buick officials for the closing of the plant, on the eve of the introduction of a new model, but since the Fisher No. 1 plant produces bodies for Buick, it was assumed that operations could not continue in the face of the Fisher strike.

R. L. Lewis, American Federation of Labor organizer, who is in charge of strike activities temporarily, will address a meeting of Chevrolet Motor Co., workers tomorrow. The announcement said the meeting would be concerned only with union membership figures as a basis for collective bargaining, but the belief was expressed in some quarters that a possible spread of the strike to that plant would be discussed.

Unofficially, it was stated that settlement of the Fisher plant strike, in which 5,000 men are idle, would be sought over the week-end and that plans called for resumption of work in the Buick plant Tuesday morning.

The Fisher employes walked out yesterday in protest against what they said was a reduction of piece work rates; a speeding up of the assembly line and alleged refusal of the management to confer with a union committee. The strike broke spontaneously when, the workers claimed, 25 men were discharged for participating in a protest demonstration the previous day.

Gain in Winter Wheat Crop for W. Virginia

Charleston, W. Va., May 11.—The State Department of Agriculture today estimated that the West Virginia winter wheat crop would be 1,809,000 bushels, slightly above the production last year. The estimate was based on slight damage since May 1 by drought conditions, which were relieved by rains over night.

Conditions of other crops reported by the department indicated a production of 132,000 bushels of rye, as compared with 144,000 last year, and 70,000 tons of hay, as compared with 53,000 tons a year ago.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

When Grandpa Was a Boy

One day after dinner when Blackie and his friends had eaten about a dozen big fat rabbits, they were all sitting out on the porch talking about how they were going to get enough to eat if they should stay in the mountains all winter. They knew there would be plenty of rabbits in the winter, but they all agreed that they were pretty tired of eating rabbits.

After they had talked a long time and hadn't decided anything, Grandpa Bear broke into a conversation.

"Why don't you boys go off in a cave and shut the door and go to sleep till next spring, like I used to do? When I was a boy, winter didn't worry me. As soon as it got so cold I didn't want to hunt any more, I would go off and find me a cave in the side of a mountain, and I would rake me up a lot of straw and break little bushes and make me a big bed. Then I would get some more bushes and after I had got in my cave I would fill the door all up with it. Then I would lie down in my bed and go to sleep.

"Some times I would sleep for four or five months. I would generally go to bed along in November when the snow got too deep for good hunting, and I would stay there till April, when the snow began to melt. Then I would wake up and come out for something to eat. For the first few days I didn't want much to eat. I would just nibble about and find a few nice tender roots, and if a little field mouse happened to come across my path I would eat him.

"After a while I would begin to want a bigger dinner and then I would go out and catch me a few fish or jack rabbits. No sir, the winters didn't bother me in those days."

To a crowd of folks that had been having good meals every day and not sleeping even all night, Grandpa Bear's story about going for four or five months without eating seemed pretty curious.

Dr. Coon doesn't believe everything he hears and he looked mighty doubtful about Grandpa Bear's story and he up and asked him where it was he did all that sleeping.

"Folks in this country don't sleep that way. They all like to eat too well to miss that many good meals." "I wasn't talking about this country," said Grandpa Bear. "I was talking about Colorado, where I was born and raised. That's a real sure-enough bear country and we don't spend all our time eating out there. But when we did eat, I want to tell you we had some pretty good meals.

"Why, you could take one of your measley little rabbits and put him in the ear of one of our sure-enough rabbits and he'd be lost. And talk about fishing. Why boys, many a time I have set by a hole in one of the little streams and slapped more fishes out of the water in a few minutes than I would eat all day. And while I am talking about fishing I just as well tell you that being so good a fisherman mighty near kept a couple of cubbies that I know from having any grandpa. But I see those children getting sleepy, so I'll wait till tomorrow night to tell the rest of the story.

Culbertson on Bridge

A Trump End-play.

An interesting situation is always presented when a partnership at the Bridge table undertakes a contract as a defensive measure expecting to be penalized, only to find that the Gods of Distribution have been so kind to them that they fulfill their contract. There is, of course, an added thrill when the grimly defending partnership have been forced to erect their last defensive against what appears to be an opposing game at a Slam contract, and when the fulfillment of the contract involves not only favorable distribution, but clever play.

Mr. Stanley Gould of Toledo, Ohio, recently sent me the hand below, which was played by him as a member of the Toledo University Bridge team:

South, Dealer
North and South vulnerable

South	West	North	East
6◇	Pass	Pass	Dbl.
Pass	Pass	Pass

While the bidding of Mr. Gould and his partner was apparently very bold, the bid of five diamonds is to be preferred to the Forcing four notrump Overcall of the Opening Preemptive bid as North can not force a heart response which would compel him to show his suit at six if partner is weak.

East did not open his partner's bid suit but elected instead to open a heart, hoping to find his partner blank of hearts and with a trump. When the Dummy was spread on the table North saw that it contained only two re-entries and that these must be conserved if he was to have any chance whatever of fulfilling his contract. North saw that a finesse of the spades was unnecessary but a finesse of the clubs had to be taken. When the heart 9 held the first trick he led a club from Dummy and won the trick with the Knave in his own hand. He then laid down the Ace of diamonds, and when West discarded he knew that East had held four trumps originally to the Queen-10-8. North now cashed his club Ace and then led the Knave of hearts, playing the Queen from Dummy. When West again discarded, the distribution of the heart suit was clear. North's next play was the Ace of hearts, upon which he discarded the Queen of clubs. He followed this with the lead of the Ten of hearts, which he ruffed with the five of diamonds. Then he laid down the Ace of spades and the Queen, ruffing with the three of diamonds in Dummy.

At this point North knew that East now held in addition to his apparent trump tricks neither a small club or a small spade. He led the last club from Dummy, which he ruffed with the six of trumps, and when East followed suit, the success of the contract was assured. North now led the nine of trumps, and East, forced to win with the Ten, had to return a trump up to the major tenace in the Declarer's hand.

While North was extremely lucky, he is also entitled to credit for the manner in which he played the hand.

Stimsons Give Party For Legal Institute

Hosts to Capital Society at Woodley Meet Guests at Back of Old Mansion, Where Wisteria Is in Bloom.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Once again the stately old estate "Woodley," home of the former Secretary of State and Mrs. Henry L. Stimson, was the scene of a reception and garden party yesterday afternoon when members of Capital society were invited to meet the members of the American Law Institute, which has been meeting in Washington this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Stimson received their guests on the rolling lawn at the back of the old mansion, which at this season is covered with immense wisteria vines in full bloom. Beyond were rolling green gardens, dotted with brightly awninged marquees where refereshments were served. Mrs. Stimson wore a gown of rose beige chiffon figured in soft blue, with a dark blue hat trimmed with lighter blue velvet. Because the day was chilly, she wore a sable scarf.

The Chief Justice of the United States and Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes held a small reception of their own at a far corner of the garden, the latter wearing a costume of gray with a long black crepe coat and a small black hat. Other members of the Supreme Court present were Associate Justice Harlan Fisk Stone, unaccompanied by the popular Mrs. Stone, who is in mourning; Justice and Mrs. Pierce Butler, the latter in a crepe suit of navy blue with a hat to match, and Associate Justice and Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, who were accompanied by their daughter, Miss Elizabeth Roberts. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wearing a gown of blue and white chiffon with a dark blue coat and wide-brimmed hat, was present, as were the Attorney General and Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, and Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor. Several members of the Hoover Cabinet present were the former Attorney General and Mrs. William DeWitt Mitchell, the latter in a gown of black and white crepe with a large black hat; the former Secretary of War and Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, the latter looking more than usually lovely in a gown of gold and brown printed chiffon with a coat of golden crepe and a large brown hat with a band of the same shade of gold, and Mrs. William N. Doak, widow of the former Secretary of Labor, who wore a black gown and hat and a smart ascot scarf of ermine. With Mr. and Mrs. Hurley was Mrs. Pearl Brown Bliss, of Chicago and Texas, who was a striking figure in smart black.

Many Diplomats Are in Attendance.

A large group of diplomats present included the British Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay; the Ambassador of France and Mme. de Laboulaye; the Ambassador of Japan and Mme. Saito; the Minister of Greece, Mr. Charalambos Simopoulos; the Minister of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Veverka, the latter in a handsome gown of black crepe with a scarlet blouse and a large black hat trimmed with a small scarlet apple; the Minister of the Irish Free State and Mrs. Michael MacWhite, the retiring Minister of Norway, Mr. Halvard Bachke; the Minister of China and Mme Sze, the Minister of Canada and Mrs. William Duncan Herridge, the Minister of Denmark and Mme. Wadsted, the Minister of Panama and Mme. Alfaro, and the Minister of Siam and Princess Damras.

Crawford Biggs, the latter in a navy blue frock trimmed with touches of pink, and a large blue hat; the former Assistant to the Attorney General, Mr. John Lord O'Brien; the former Assistant Attorney General and Mrs. Roy St. Lewis, and the Director General of the Pan-American Union, Dr. Leo S. Rowe.

The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and Mrs. Alfred A. Wheat were among the guests, as were Justice Peyton Gordon, who with Chief Justice Hughes, Mr. George Wickersham, Mr. Elihu Root, and Mr. George Weitzel is one of the charterers of the Law Institute; Justice and Mrs. Jesse Adkins, Justice and Mrs. Joseph Cox, and Mrs. Daniel W. O'Donoghue, wife of Justice O'Donoghue.

Mr. and Mrs. MacCracken Among Those Present.

Mr. and Mrs. William P. MacCracken, jr., were among the popular guests at the reception, the latter very charming in a gown of beige printed crepe with a short black jacket and a large black hat. Others seen were Capt. and Mrs. John H. Gibbons, Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Ellis, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Hewes, Col. and Mrs. U. S. Grant 3d, Judge and Mrs. J. Harry Covington, with their daughter, Mrs. Lewis Clark, who has recently come to Washington for a visit with her parents, after making her home in China during the four years she has been married; Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Glover, jr., former Senator and Mrs. Atlee Pomerene, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Mark L. Bristol, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Tuckerman; the Chief Justice of Massachusetts, Mr. Charles Rugg, and his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Charles Rugg, jr., wife of the former Assistant Attorney General; Mr. Walter Davidge, Miss Mabel Boardman, and Miss Anne and Miss Mary Randolph. Badly Dressed "Gal" Reporter Is Relegated to Obscurity

That's What One of the City's Most Competent Women News Hounds Has to Say; Maintains the "Toughie" Feminine Reporter Is Passe.

The public fondly cherishes its idea of what a woman reporter is like. This idea, outlandish in all respects, extends to her clothes, which are supposed to be pretty terrible.

Is this idea correct? An emphatic denial is the answer.

This is the last in a series of six articles about clothes and their relation to "women who do things."

By Irene Hasbrook.

SHE IS A tough baby.

A cigarette alternately bobs and droops from one corner of her mouth. Words issue from the other corner as she speaks without removing it. She talks loudly and swears profusely.

Other women are in awe of her—she is supposed to "know life," to have seen it at its best and worst, particularly the latter. She works side by side with men and is very much of a "good fellow."

Dresses Accordingly.

She is good looking and hard. Young and cynical. Jaunty and hard-bitten.

And dresses accordingly. Clothes mean protection from the elements and a method of attracting attention. Sartorially she is thrown together bizarrely, haphazardly. It may be a mannish suit with spike heeled shoes. Or a chiffon dress with a beret. Whatever it is, the result is a fashion disaster.

Who is she anyway? Why, she's the news-reading public's conception of the gal reporter.

Do the women who chase the news look, act and dress like this incredible hypothetical person? Listen to two newspaper women who can be regarded as authorities on the subject.

Mrs. Genevieve Forbes Herrick, president of the Women's Press Club, discussed an abridged edition of this newspaper phenomenon—the girl reporter for whom the most convenient classification is "hey-hey," who is everything the public conceives her to be, but in a much milder form.

"This type of reporter is out. She's passe. It's the woman who treats newspaper work as she would any other office job who gets the news. The tough girl in the Bohemian clothes is usually pretty incompetent."

STYLE for a newspaper girl goes something like this. She's Miss Margaret Santry, Post radio reporter.

Mrs. Hobart Brooks, president of the Newspaper Women's Club, doesn't seem to think this species obsolete. "There is a younger crop of women reporters, who fit your description, with modifications. They wear flat heels and sports clothes everywhere, no matter where they go to get a story."

Polite Indication.

And then she indicated, but very sweetly and politely, that she thought they could dress more suitably.

Mrs. Herrick's clothes are far from being thrown together. She dresses with care and distinction. And her attitude toward dress counts for a great deal in figuring whether clothes are important to a news reporter—she's at the top of her profession.

"I feel sorry for the woman with so much iron in her soul that she doesn't love clothes," she remarked.

Mrs. Brooks' summing up of her ideas on the clothes situation is pertinent.

"I've observed it's the women who are well dressed, and in a feminine fashion, who are the big money-makers."

Poor public. One more illusion gone up the chimney?

The Old Orphanage Vanishing, According to Social Worker

THE OLD-STYLE ORPHANAGE is vanishing. Substitute homes where children have opportunity to develop their individual talents and personalities are taking its place.

So believes Miss Ruth A. Bolton, secretary of the Montgomery County Social Service League. Miss Bolton, who holds that herding children into institutions destroys their initiative, looks forward to the day when all homeless children will have the advantages of foster homes.

"At present our league is supervising 210 children in foster homes in Montgomery County," she said yesterday. "The people who take these children into their homes are paid by the county. The homes are licensed by the State and are regularly visited by social workers from the agency.

"Before a child is placed in one of these homes, the social worker studies the needs of the child and selects the type of home that will suit him best.

"Children in these homes are encouraged to take part in community life, to play with other children, and to accept the home they live in as their own."

The idea of providing homelife for dependent children is comparatively new, according to Miss Bolton.

"In the early days of the past century," she said, "orphans were placed in almshouses with adult paupers. In these homes health conditions were deplorable and moral hazards were great. Many young children were taken from these institutions and indentured as apprentices or servants. Later, children were placed in separate institutions."

Miss Bolton said the experiment of placing children in foster homes was first tried in New York.

Social Activity to Provide Political Contacts Is Idea of One of Youngest Congressional Wives

Mrs. Wearin and Husband Were and Are Farmers and Proud of It.

Although their respective careers have taken them into the political spotlight, each of the distinguished women who have been interviewed in The Washington Post's biweekly radio feature series has been revealed as more staunchly feminine than feminist. Today's is the eleventh story in the series.

By Margaret Santry,
(The Radio Reporter).

SUCH social activity as provides a purely practical adjunct to her husband's career is the order of the day for the new Congressional wife who has just arrived upon the Washington scene.

The whirl of society holds no lure unless it offers useful contacts helpful to political progress. So contends Mrs. Otha D. Wearin, wife of the Representative from Iowa, who made her radio debut in The Washington Post's "First Ladies of the Capital" series over a National Broadcasting Co. network yesterday. She spoke from WRC at 2 p. m. to a Nation-wide audience.

In a discussion on "What the New Deal Means to the Farmer's Wife," Mrs. Wearin revealed an authoritative knowledge of the agricultural situation for her 25 years. This wife of the third youngest member of Congress proudly described the farming background that has given her and her husband a practical understanding of the farmer's problems.

Mrs. Wearin—"I am no city girl, Miss Santry. My husband and I are farmers, and our parents are. In the summer, when we return to Iowa, we live on a farm. We are no theorists when it comes to the problem of the farmer, and the things should be and are being done to relieve him of his difficulties."

Discusses Bill.

Enumerating the plans the Agricultural Adjustment Administration are undertaking to help the farming population, Mrs. Wearin discussed the Hope-Wearin bill, championed by her husband, as one that will enable farmers to get a better price for hogs through stricter regulation of price fixing.

As to her youth, Mrs. Wearin declared there are times when she has difficulty in holding her own with some of the older veterans in the social whirl.

Mrs. Wearin—"Last week a number of Congressional wives and myself were invited to preside at a Girl Scout meeting. I was mistaken several times for one of the Girl Scouts."

MRS. OTHA D. WEARIN, wife of the third youngest member of Congress, is so young she was mistaken for a Girl Scout at one of their meetings. She's proud of being a farmer—says she's no city girl.

As President of the 73 Club, comprised of newcomers to Washington in the present Administration, Mrs. Wearin described the social gatherings that enable these younger members of Congressional society to know each other better. The major part of her social activity is confined to these gatherings.

Mrs. Wearin: "I have not gone in for much social life. Assisting my husband as much as possible in his office, although I am not on his pay roll, is more interesting to me than spending afternoons at bridge. I've confined my activities to making the practical kind of contacts that are important to my husband."

Mrs. Wearin is not unmindful of the value of these contacts to herself, however. For she is of the generation of young wives who have watched an economic world topple. For this reason she is a modern wife, who believes in combining marriage with personal interests.

Mrs. Wearin: "I do think the changing standards that world depression has brought about makes it impossible for a modern wife to lean on a husband in the manner women in generations before could. No one knows what's around the corner, and I think it is important to develop your own talents and interests in a manner that will enable you to function for yourself if you ever have to. While my husband's success is my chief concern, I do feel I must keep apace with everything that is going on for the self-reliance it develops in one."

Does Washington change these young sons and daughters of the il when they leave the home ground? It hasn't changed Mr. Wearin. He hasn't been taken in by any slick social tricks. He is a farmer and is determined to remain one. He hasn't changed his farmer habits, even during his sojourn in Washington. Not that he isn't enjoying the realization of his boyhood ambition to come here to Congress.

Mrs. Wearin: "I often think I'm still back on our farm in Iowa, because my husband insists on keeping his farmer habits. He gets up early and demands as big a breakfast as if he were going out to build a fence. Then he rushes off to the Capitol."

Miss Santry: "And does he like to go out in society?"

Mrs. Wearin: "No. However, I did manage to get him out to a social affair in honor of the Ambassador to Mexico, Josephus Daniels, the other day. Imagine my astonishment, however, when he arrived at the reception in a business suit and the customary red necktie. It didn't phase him, however. He went right down the frock-coated line of ambassadors, Governors and other dignitaries as comfortably as if he had been shaking hands with his old friends at home."

Tune in Monday at 11 a. m. over Station WRC and hear Mrs. Mary Harriman Rumsey chattily interviewed by The Post's radio reporter.

What Today Means

"Taurus."

If May 12 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11:30 a. m. to 1:30 p. m., from 4:30 to 6:30 p. m. and from 10:30 until midnight. The danger periods are from 6:30 to 8:30 a. m., from 2:30 to 30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m.

You will have to be very alert on this date if you wish to accomplish what you set out to do, for there may be numerous little things come up that will delay your progress. The day shows indicaion that it will be fraught with unusually keen competition, not only where business matters are concerned, but in love affairs as well. If you stick right to the thing that requires your attention, and do no allow anything or anybody to divert your thoughts from its objective, your efforts will probably meet with success.

The woman born on May 12, as a rule, has marvelous vitality. If this is your natal day, there is nothing "wishy-washy" about your disposition. You know your own mind, and it requires a great deal of effort on the part of others to cause you to change it. If engaged in a commercial career, your self-assertiveness as well as strength of character assures success. Your facility to make friends readily, and your tact, are qualifications essential for social success, and possessing both, you need never worry about your popularity.

The child born on May 12, upon reaching its teens, will attain a prominent place in its school's athletics. Its physical prowess may help it gain many laurels in this field of activity. Care must be exercised that too much time is not devoted to sports to the detriment of its studies. This child will resent an unreasonable amount of restraint, so a lot of good common sense is required when rules and regulations are formulated.

The man born on May 12 has a very positive disposition. If this is your birthday, you have the satisfaction of knowing there i nothing hypocritical in your character. To your way of thinking, a spade is a spade, and there is no hesitancy when it is necessary to express an opinion. Your frankness inspires confidence, so that people thrown into close contact trust you implicitly. If you have not already discovered "the one and only woman," it will not be long before you do, and domestic life will be accompanied by many benefits, especially of a satisfactory financial nature.

May 12 will prove a good day for people of an active type, but for those who are inclined to take things as they come and who dilly-dally, it may prove very unsatisfactory. There is a promising day for arranging for indoor social activities or week-end parties. Any neglect in attending to correspondence may result in an embarrassing situation.

Club Federation Names Winners in Art Project

This Project Part of Nation-Wide Program to Aid Local Artists and Encourage Art; Takoma Club Receives a Painting.

AS PART OF A NATION-WIDE program to encourage art projects and help local artists, District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs announced nine awards last night at the closing session of its annual convention. One award was to the Takoma Park Woman's Club; eight were to individuals.

Jex Wins Award.

To Garnett Jex, recently employed as a PWAP artist, was given the $150 purchase award, which was contributed by Mrs. Eugene Meyer. Mr. Jex's painting is a landscape entitled "The Shenandoah Valley." It will be hung in the headquarters of the General Federation of Women's Clubs at 1734 N street northwest.

An anonymous purchase award of $25 went to Robert Motley for his painting, "June Morning." A purchase award of a similar amount, given by Julius Garfinckel, went to Benson Moore for his painting, "Winter in Rock Creek Park."

The first jury prize of $30 was awarded Miss Beulah Weaver. The second jury prize of $25, given by an anonymous donor to the man less than 30 years old making the greatest progress in painting, went to Roland Lyon. The third jury prize of $20 went to Roger Ritase for his "Crossroads," and the fourth jury prize of $15, contributed by Mrs. Charles B. Walcott, went to Olin Dows for his "Greta." A prize of $10, known as the Sunshine Community Award, went to S. Bell Updegraff for a decorative panel.

Club Gets Painting.

The Takoma Park Woman's Club was awarded a painting, "Autumn," by Norma Rose, for the work it had done in fostering civic art projects.

Funds for the art awards were collected by Mrs. Samuel A. Swiggett, chairman of the division of art of the District Federation.

Mrs. Swiggett arranged for the District art contest, in which the works of local artists were exhibited at the eight branch libraries of the District. A jury from Baltimore selected four paintings from each exhibit for the final contest and exhibition. Selections were made on the basis of creative promise rather than craftsmanship. The exhibition excited such wide interest in Washington it was continued through the month of April instead of concluding in March, as was at first intended.

Similar art contests are being held in all the States as a part of the art program of the Feneral Federation of Women's Clubs.

G.O.P. Triumph Held Country's Only Salvation

Republican Women Hear This View at Fifth Political School.

ONLY the triumph of the Republican party in the Congressional elections this fall can save this country from disaster, according to Peter Snyder, who addressed the League of Republican Women at its Fifth Political School at the Mayflower yesterday.

Mr. Snyder, Assistant Secretary of Labor in the Coolidge and Hoover Administrations, declared he was looking forward to the time when the "brain trust would go out the back door," carrying its radical views with it, and the true ideals of Government would be reestablished.

"The Democrats are not in power today," he said. "They have given way to the radicals, the so-called liberals and intelligentsia."

Describing President Roosevelt's statements that "economic laws are made by man" and "that the Government owes every man a job," as sophistries, Mr. Snyder pleaded for the return of the old principles of Government.

"The important things to remember in government," he said, "are that it is not the duty of the Government to make everyone rich, nor to infringe on the rights of the people. What we need is a solid monetary policy and a sound Treasury."

Allen Treadway, Representative from Massachusetts, speaking on "The Present Congress from the Viewpoint of a Republican Member," asserted it was difficult to criticize the policies of the present Administration because of the great personal popularity of the President.

"Whenever we attack the laws passed under the present Administrtion the people shout that we are attacking the President. That is not true. Let us examine the bills passed in Congress since the election of President Roosevelt, and judge the bills on their merit."

Mr. Treadway pointed out there are now 48,000 more Federal employes than when the Democratic party went into power and berated the extravagence of the present Government officials.

He asserted none of the steps taken by the Administration had been constructive, and warned the members of the league the country was headed toward a dictatorship.

Randolph Leigh spoke on "The Constitution of the United States." Mrs. Frank Mondell presided at the morning session, and Mrs. Virginia White Speel at the afternoon session.

Rich Girl.

By Katherine Smith.

If I'd found a fortune early,
If my money bags were fat,
If I'd bracelets, rings and pearly
Necklaces and this and that,
If I'd Dubonnet and Sherry,
Caviar and Russian tea,
Could I know my man would marry
Just my money or just—me?

Celebrity's Wife Doesn't Regard Him as Famous

Mrs. Pound Says Husband Would Be Embarrassed If She Did.

CELEBRITIES are expected to be reticent about their own renown, but a relative is usually willing to admit fame in the family. Not so Mrs. Roscoe Pound, wife of Harvard's Law School's dean.

Although Dean Pound's opinions on legal matters and his books on jurisprudence are prized on both sides of the Atlantic, his wife prefers to think of him as just an ordinary man.

Harris & Ewing.

AN UNOBTRUSIVE place in the background appeals to Mrs. Roscoe Pound, wife of Harvard dean.

Mrs. Pound, fashionably dressed and vivacious, admitted that reporters and news photographers call frequently at the Pound home in Watertown, Mass. But on those occasions she withdraws from the scene as much as possible, leaving the dean to do the family honors in the limelight.

In fact, Lucy Miller Pound comes dangerously close to being an old-fashioned wife. None of this feminist nonsense for her. She proudly declares her three major interests are her husband, her home and her garden, named in the order of their importance.

But aside from those three things she has many other interests. She enjoys all sorts of activities, from a daily before-breakfast hike with Dean Pound, to an informal Sunday night gathering of friends in her home. And she finds time to keep pace with National and international affairs, although she declares faculty members' wives are no better posted than other women.

"It depends upon the individual," she said.

Achievements of Women in Past Inspired D. C. Clubs' Prize Poems

Mrs. Catherine Cates Coblentz Wins Both First and Second Prizes, Using Spanish Religious and Pilgrim Women as Subjects.

THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF WOMEN in the past inspired 94 persons to submit poems to the contest recently conducted by the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs. The subject was "What Women Have Done."

Mrs. Catherine Cate Coblentz, widely known Washington poet, won both the first and second prizes with her "Maria Coronel," written about the mother superior of a religious order in Spain in the seventeenth century, and "One Named Susanna," pertaining to Susanna Winslow, first bride of the colony at Plymouth.

Other Awards.

In accord with Mrs. Coblentz's request, however, the second prize was awarded to the next in line and went to Miss Marguerite Wilcox for her poem, "Women of the Ages." Miss Mary Strong was given third prize for "First Lady in the Land, First Lady in the Cabinet."

With 21 entries dealing with women's contributions to the world, and 40 written in praise of women in general, the remainder were about such outstanding individuals as Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Anne Sullivan Macy and her pupil, Helen Keller; Sara Teasdale, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Amelia Earhart, Florence Nightingale, Marie Curie, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Eve, and Pocahontas.

Although she is an established poet and was one of the founders and editors of the Carillon, a National magazine of verse, Mrs. Coblentz has also won distinction as a prose writer. For the past three years she has been gathering material for two books, one of which is based on legendary material; the other, designed for younger readers and entitled "Animal Pioneers," is a volume of stories about the first animals brought to this country.

Mrs. Coblentz is the wife of Dr. William Weber Coblentz, of the Bureau of Standards.

The first prize poem is based on the legend that a young, beautiful woman, clothed in blue and calling herself Maria Coronel, made many visits to the Indians, teaching them the Gospel.

"Legend of Maria Coronel."

Spain was then at the springtime,
Springtime was at the dawn,
And stealing forth from her cloister
Maria of Jesus was gone.

Did the eyes of another follow
Who shared in your vision's ray,
Who would pray for you in the dusking
And take up your task by day?

What was an ocean for crossing
To one with a faith so sure?
What were the rivers, the desert?
Beyond—was religion's allure.

You were the lad in the shiphold,
You were the boy of the night;
But in the land of promise
You were the Lady of Light.

Toiling over the mesa
Wrapped in Madonna blue,
Maria, maid of Agreda
Maria, whom no one knew.

Still, still in the night-time
Shadowed pueblos tell
Of the lady in blue who taught them,
Maria Coronel.

—CATHERINE CATE COBLENTZ.

Susanna Winslow, one of the Pilgrims to sail from Holland, was the first Pilgrim woman to become a mother in the New World, and was one of the first widows. She is the subject of Mrs. Coblentz's poem which won the second prize.

"One Named Susanna."
1612.

She was so young, and slender as a flame,
To William White but lately come to Leyden
The very music of her English name
Seemed all the boundaries of his heart to widen.
The linden scattered blossoms as his hand
Was busied at the unaccustomed loom,
And spring was weaving quietly in Holland
Love and the daffodils to sudden bloom.

Her hair was like the sunlight pouring down,
Her eyes made William think of purple heather
Lifting above the grayness of her gown
Like blossoms glowing in the darkest weather.
Her name, he thought, was kindred to Hosannah,
Softly he whispered, "Susanna, my Susanna!"

1630.

Windblown, Susanna faced the autumn gales,
Lifting her courage high in many an hour
When terror billowed through the creaking sails
And death was thrusting at the small Mayflower.
Ringed with the storms the dauntless ship moved west,
Bearing that fearless one, in faith abiding,
A precious cargo hidden in her breast,
Serenely certain that her God was guiding.

At last the word: "We're closing in with land."
"'Tis well that this be so," Susanna thought,
"Safe to His harbor, the hollow of God's hand,
The ship to anchor, and my sons are brought."
And Peregrine, they named the child she bore
Within the shadow of New England's shore.

1620-1621.

Susanna in the harbor giving birth;—
Susanna turning lonely toward a hill
Where William slept within the alien earth.
Susanna strangely quieted and still,
But firm beneath the storms that flooded fast
Against the haven of New Plymouth Bay.
Yet was her head high lifted by the mast,
Her eyes were steady, and her heart could pray.

Sorrow to sorrow drawn, and strength to strength,
And Mistress White was Edward Winslow's bride.
Birth, death, and marriage peace at length.
Thus was the pattern woven, full and wide.
While through the ages as a brave Hosannah,
Her memory lingers, Susanna, ours Susanna.

Preview of the Future

The golden age of science still lies before us, says Dr. Lyman T. Briggs, Uncle Sam's No. 1 scientist, who declares that the scientist of tomorrow must look beyond his laboratory and test tubes to life itself . . . an exclusive interview in the Magazine Section of the

Washington Sunday Post

Here's a Robot Who'll Do Your Kitchen Work

This Gadget Will Perform Much of the Routine Drudgery.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THE FUTURE may bring a robot who will walk into the kitchen and perform the myriad of fatiguing tasks. In the meantime, why wait?

The present has already brought a kitchen mixer that does everything but cook — and even makes that easier.

The housewife and the benagged lesser half appreciate the drudgery attached to the ordinary cooking routine. They will view with amazement the activities of this "gadget"! It performs easily, smoothly, and efficiently all the arm wearying tasks of mixing, beating, whipping, stirring, creaming, and extracting juices. Never in the evolution of kitchen equipment has there ever been anything with such versatility. Never anything that saves such a vast amount of time and labor.

Furthermore, it looks attractive. French ivory bowls contrast with the crackled green enamel base. The ivory-colored motor case with a narrow green band matches both bowls and base. The handle is black—for practicality's sake.

The mixer, or "fixer" as it's called, comes complete with two fluted glass bowls, a juice extractor bowl to match, and a drink mixer for malted milks, or what have you.

Some of its more technical attributes are: The ability of motor and paddles to tilt back for draining batter or removing bowls from stand; convenient portability that allows it to be lifted from table to stove and back again.

Fathers, brothers, sons, and husbands, who are frantically last minute shopping for a Mother's Day gift can certainly find nothing more sure to please the ladies than this same mixer. Due to its recent reduction there are only 19 left. So, gentlemen, while opportunity knocks——!

• • • •

A Problem Solved.

Nothing is more of an interior decorating problem than that bit of a wall space which nothing suits. Pictures, wall vases, tapestries have failed the trial. The whole family shake their heads but rebel against resignation.

And then one day mother goes shopping and she sees the sculptured plaques in an F street gift shop.

There are "The Old Folks at Home," "Sir Galahad," "Ann Hathaway's Cottage," "The Gleaners," "The Old Curiosity Shop," and numbers of others. Each one is delicately tinted against a subdued ivory background.

The problem of the wall space is definitely and satisfactory solved.

• • • •

Hybrid Blouses.

Like the poor puppy who is "just dog", some blouses in a local shop have a dubious pedigree. They appear to belong to the organdy clan — but there's a suspicious resemblance to seersucker. The consequence is, as you've already guessed, they're termed the organdy seersuckers.

No matter what they are, or aren't they're going to be summer favorites. Why? Because they're divinely dainty, comfortably cool, and quite as pretty as they're practical. They'll take to the wash tub like ducks to water. They'll dry quickly, and their seersucker streak sets aside the necessity of ironing them. No better buys for $1.95!

Can You Answer These?

Can you pass a beauty test with a perfect score? Five questions have been compiled by a world famous beauty authority whose representative will arrive in town Monday to advise women on their beauty problems.

Here as the questions:

Do you look five to fifteen years younger than your age?

Do you know to which type of beauty you belong. Do you strive to make your face the perfect face of its particular type through clever make-up?

Do you know whether your skin is dry, normal, oily, or a combination? And are your beauty preparations selected accordingly?

Do you spend at least five minutes daily on skin care?

Do you know that powder, rouge and lipstick should be selected primarily to harmonize with the underlying skin tone of your complexion rather than according to the color of your hair or eyes?

Women who can not answer all these queries in the affirmative are invited to consult this representative and learn the scientific way to achieve beauty. She will be at the local store from Monday through Saturday to give comprehensive answers to these questions and any other women may wish to ask. She will also recommend simple and effective home treatments for the skin and will create for every woman requesting it, a personalized Parisian make-up. All this, don't forget, absolutely free of charge!

Gay Furniture and Bright Umbrellas To Grow in This Summer's Gardens

White Combined With Colors Will Appear in Pieces and Cushions.

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, May 12.—If there is any doubt in your mind about how your garden is going to grow this summer, better plan now on some 1934 garden furniture. For that is gay enough to compensate for any lack of floral decoration.

White appears everywhere . . . in chairs, tables, chaises longues and umbrellas. White combined with bright blue, brilliant red, cool green or sunny yellow.

Yellow and green go together, too (and make quite a daffodil effect). So do orange and blue and red and blue. And there's solid yellow, solid green, solid white.

It's the metal furniture which is creating the most interest this season. Not only because it takes the brilliant colors so nicely, but because of its striking designs.

Solid metal, metal tubing and wrought iron are used. And there are complete metal sets as well as sets of metal table and wood-frame chairs.

Rope Upholstery

One of the newest ways of upholstering metal chairs is with bright colored woven rope. (The chairs in the illustration are rope-upholstered).

Sectional pad cushions covered with waterproof material are another way (and this you can see in the chaise longue pictured.) Others are finished off with heavy duck. And some aren't upholstered at all but have backs and seats of narrow metal strips woven in the manner of cane seating or of fine mesh.

Enormous Umbrellas.

Other tables come in sections . . . a heavy, sturdy base, a center rod and a top. And most tables are made so the umbrella (and umbrellas are enormous this year) fits down through the center and is held securely in a metal socket.

The umbrellas are, usually arranged so they can be adjusted by tipping to the angle of the sun. And their designs beggar description. Horizontal bands or pie-shaped sections of contrasting colors leaf patterns, huge polka dots, simple geometric figures . . . it's practically a case of "Name it and you may have it."

There are many small gadgets which add greatly to the comfort of garden-sitting. One of these is the tea-spike, made of metal and painted to match the furniture. Lightweight painted metal tea wagons with chromium lined shelves are a big aid to serving refreshments.

(Copyright, 1934.)

Garden furniture of the type described can be found in all the better class furniture shops and department stores in Washington.

Spiced Pineapple.

1½ cups sugar

This may be packed in sterilized jars and sealed for future use.

I WAS A SPY!

By MARTHE McKENNA

What Happened Thus Far.

Marthe Cnockaert McKenna, a Belgian who served as a British secret agent during the war, in previous installments told of her service as a nurse in a German military hospital—and of aiding the Allies at the same time. She caused the destruction of a German munitions train after surreptitiously reading a notation in a notebook of a German officer who flirted with her. She discovers a German officer, billeted at her father's cafe, is a German espionage agent. She carries a message that the Kaiser is going to visit Roulers, plotting his death at Allied hands. The Kaiser calls off his trip. Agent 63 is killed by a German. Marthe reports that a German battalion is billeted in a brewery at Roulers. Allied planes bomb the brewery. Otto asks her to become a spy for Germany. She agrees, determined to double-cross the enemy.

HALF an hour later I was summoned to the hospital. Blood oozed through the mattress to the floor from many a hospital bed that night. Men were crowded moaning in the corridors. I shall never forget the cries of those men. I worked doggedly, dazedly, trying not to remember that I was responsible for the bloody human wreckage around me.

"Have you any news for me?" inquired Otto at the end of the week as he passed me on the stairs one evening. "I think you must have got some inkling of the activities carrying on here by now?"

He peered into my face with a cunning, eager expression.

"Don't Be Afraid."

"I see," he muttered, and then: "Now, do not be afraid. You understand that in this work not a soul in Roulers will know anything of your part. You may trust me absolutely." There was a pause while he pressed my hand reassuringly. Then he dropped it rather suddenly. "You realize, Marthe," he pronounced in a low tone, "that I am perfectly certain that with your knowledge of the civilians of this place you will be able to give me the information I want. If I find that your mind is a blank and you know nothing about these matters, I shall naturally begin to look for a reason. I have always liked you, Marthe. I do not wish to make myself unnecessarily unpleasant." He turned and hurried on down the stairs.

I was staring out of my bedroom window early one morning, watching a fat little robin dancing among the green foliage of the tree without, and thinking how much happier was his lot than mine, when some shots gave me an idea. At the opposite side of the Place a German soldier in shirt-sleeves was shooting at a pigeon. There was no doubt that in the first days of the war, at any rate, these birds were much used for carrying secret messages, and there was a general order among the military in Roulers that every pigeon was to be shot on sight. There and then I sat down and wrote on a tiny scroll of paper a series of six four-letter numbers, interspersed with letters. This I crumpled and rubbed against a piece of raw meat until it was well blood-smeared. Then I went to the hospital as usual. When the Oberartz made his rounds, I asked him to telephone Otto, and within half an hour an orderly informed me that he was waiting in the office. He was alone.

"You have discovered something?" he exclaimed, regarding me earnestly. "Well, Marthe, what is it?" Had he asked that question with a slightly ironic note in his voice? I was not sure.

I produced the cryptic message from my packet.

A Faked Message.

"I obtained this from a certain Belgian who wishes to remain anonymous," I explained. "He found the bird with this note clipped to its leg lying dead just outside the town on the road to Ypres. I can not decode it, but you will note that below the code writing there is a Y3. This represents a signature. I have discovered that all those employed in anti-German espionage in the Roulers area are referred to as the Y group, and each individual of these, of course, has a number. No doubt with your training as a secret service officer you will be able to make more of this than I."

He snatched the paper, pored over it, then straightened up.

"Without a doubt!" he muttered half to himself. "You have begun well—better than I had expected!—this shall go at once to the cipher department—they can decode any message ever written within 48 hours," he finished brightly and hastened from the room.

So for a moment I had created a respite for myself. It was a blessed relief. I felt like the individual who had just come out from a grueling afternoon in the dentist's chair with the knowledge that a week was to elapse before he must sit in it again. I might succeed in beguiling Otto for some considerable time if I used all my ingenuity, but I could not carry on upon these lines forever. This was but a respite. I must rack my brains for some more effective way of combating Otto. For the moment, however, I could feel the joy of peace and security.

A week later I passed Otto talking to a man whom I knew to be a plainclothes detective in the place. He saw me and came toward me, touching his cap as if his mind was otherwise occupied.

He was looking at me hard. "I can not understand it, Marthe," he began. "The cipher department can not make head or tail of that note you handed me. Do you understand the significance of that? It is very strange, for a man well trained in cipher work should in time be able to decipher anything which another man can put into cipher." While he had been speaking, he had been looking upward following the flight of a bird. Swiftly he looked me straight in the eyes. "Marthe, do you think that message can have been a 'blind?'" he suggested in a quiet tone.

Otto Smiles Frostily.

"I can't tell, Herr Otto," I replied, trying to hide the catch in my breath. "But perhaps we shall learn later."

"Hm—well, we shall see," he grunted. "In the meanwhile, Marthe, you will carry on with your investigations, eh?—and I shall hope to have a talk with you before long." He saluted and his smile held no warmth in it, then he turned back to the man he had left.

Two days later the dead body of Otto was found lying beside the Menin road by a transport driver at 7 o'clock in the morning. Two bullets had passed through his brain. At first I thought the murder had been done by Alphonse and for all my relief I was shocked and somehow a little sorry, but later I discovered that on that night Alphonse had been up at the line with his ambulance. Then I asked him about it.

"I think it must have been a 'safety-pin man,' sister," was his answer. "The day after you told me of your trouble I saw the old woman, 'Canteen Ma,' in the town and followed her out of Roulers to a quiet part of the country-side. Then I went up and showed her my safety-pins. I told her of the position you were in. All she said was: 'Well, there are several safety-pin men, good friends of mine, who will be interested to hear this!' And with that she tapped the nag with her stick and on she went."

A tall, mustached stranger approached me one evening not long afterward as I was walking along a quiet side-street toward home.

"Mademoiselle, would you kindly direct me to the Grand Place," he requested in Flemish.

I contrived to pilot him well into the centre of the road as we neared the Place, for in those days in Roulers even the walls were likely to have ears.

"The address you ask, Monsieur, is my home," I informed him.

"Then you are 'Laura?'" he murmured in an undertone.

"You have guessed right."

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

The Harmonies of Sleep.

Ninety per cent of the noise of snoring is caused by the vibration of the soft palate. When a person sleeps with his mouth open two currents of incoming air meet in the pharnyx. One has come through the nose and the other through the mouth. In breathing out, the blast of air from the lungs is divided into two outgoing currents at the same point. The soft palate, a loose curtain, hangs just at the point where the road forks. Caught between these currents it vibrates, making the snoring sound. When a bad snorer reaches a certain bar in his music and appears to stop breathing or to choke up, the soft palate has lodged across the passageway. He starts, appears about to waken and then breathes easily. His arrested breathing has started another set of operations, his soft palate is drawn from across the opening and, for a while, breathing is easy and unimpeded.

The other small part of the noise of snoring is caused by air battling through mucus and vibration of other soft parts.

Dr. Donald Laird calls attention to the fact that men snore in bass while women are contralto snorers. How can this be if the noise making machinery is not the vocal cords, but is the soft plate? The reason is that the vocal cords are only one part of the sound making apparatus. In speech and in singing vibrations of these cords originate the noise, but its quality is determined in great part by the shape of the larynx, pharynx, nose and mouth, and the soft palate. The male snorer performs in bass because of the shape and size of his soft palate, but also because of the arrangement of his sounding board.

Tongue, Vegetables Combined Make Nice Hot or Cold Dish

By Ann Barrett.

TONGUE—COOKED SLOWLY, so that it comes out juicy and tender—there's a meat that is prized by many (including the much-traveled Andrew W. Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury), who have tasted the world's best dishes.

Not only prized for its own flavor, but for the way it teams up with other foods. Braised fresh tongue with vegetables. Hot smoked tongue with spinach. Cold pickled tongue and potato salad. Cold sliced tongue in sandwiches, with mustard pickles.

The meat is easy to cook, the main idea being to give it plenty of time to cook slowly. If it's smoked tongue, put it to soak in cold water overnight. Then, whether fresh or smoked, here's what to do next for plain-cooked tongue: Put it in a kettle with boiling water to barely cover, drop in a small piece of bayleaf, a small onion stuck with two whole cloves, and a stalk of celery. (If the tongue is fresh, also add 1¼ teaspoons salt for each quart of boiling water.) Then bring to a boil and boil ten minutes. Reduce heat and cook slowly till tender (three to five hours, depending on size). If the tongue is to be served hot, remove the skin at once; then slice about ¼ inch thick. If tongue is to be served cold, let it cool in its own juice before skinning.

Pickled Tongues.

Choose 4 fresh lamb or pig tongues. Wash and scrape these and cook slowly in boiling water to cover about two hours. Then remove the skin from tongues and put them in pot, with enough of the water they were cooked in to half cover them. Then add vinegar to bring liquid just over top of tongues. Add 1 teaspoon salt, 1 bayleaf, ½ teaspoon whole all-spice, ½ teaspoon whole mustard seed, ½ teaspoon whole black peppers, 1 cup sliced onion. Bring whole mixture to a boil and boil five minutes. Then turn the mixture into a crock and let stand several days.

NO ONE in the WJSV studios paid more than passing attention to the scheduling of James I. Hambleton, senior aviculturist of the Bureau of Entomology, Department of Agriculture, for a talk on bees at 3:30 p. m. next Wednesday.

Columbia's publicity department even got out a release on the broadcasting calling Mr. Hambleton a senior agriculturist, which shows that they didn't know very much about Mr. Hambleton.

But when Mr. Hambleton let it be known that he intended to illustrate his lecture with sound effects and that he thought the best way to do that would be to bring a swarm of his best behaving bees right into the studio, a great deal of attention was paid the matter.

The Columbia publicity department, the Washington end of it, at least, got out another handout which said that Mr. Hambleton decidedly was not an agriculturist, but an aviculturist. Shorty, the office boy, said he believed his grandmother was going to die. And the announcers, placing their destinies in Fortune's lap, drew straws to see who should put Mr. Hambleton and his bees on the air.

The shortest straw went to Harold Gray, which was too bad, because, in the first place, Harold's bulk would suggest a lot of unexpected opportunities to us, were we a bee, and then he is quite a nice boy, young, promising and recently married.

They say being stung to death is a most horrible way to die.

Debating is one of our leading abominations, particularly when indulged in formally by college undergraduates, so we probably wouldn't mention at all a debate Columbia is airing today were it not for the fact that Dan O'Brien, 75-year-old hobo king, is going to defend his ancient and honorable profession against that stalwart of righteous toil, Brigadier John Allan, head of the Salvation Army's Campaign Headquarters.

Salvation Army shelters throughout the Nation will be thrown open and their radios tuned to C. B. S. at 3:45 p. m. to allow thousands of the knights of the road to hear Dan commend and Brigadier John deprecate their social standing.

We intend to be listening, too. You never can tell when the bosses are going to tire of the stuff you write.

This really belongs in the travel note department, but Bob Trout (C. B. S.) would think we were kidding him, whereas we, who are entirely indebted to N. B. C. for all the traveling we've done this year, are really very envious, even about Gettysburg.

Bob goes to the battlefield May 26 to make the usual Presidential broadcast overtures, and to New York May 31 for the fleet review.

Jewish Campaign Adds Two Weeks

$15,000 Raised in Drive for $35,000.

Decision to extend the United Jewish appeal for two weeks after the scheduled closing date of May 15 has been made by the executive committee of the $35,000 campaign.

Less than $15,000 has been raised thus far in the drive, laregly because of lack of sufficient workers to cover all prospective givers, according to Isidore Hershfield, drive chairman. Efforts will be made over the week-end to recruit additional volunteers, and early next week a rally of all drive workers will be held at the Jewish Community Center.

Louis E. Spiegler, drive director, reported that there have been to date 486 contributions and that at least 500 more are necessary if the campaign is to succeed.

C. & P. Phone Rate Slash Order Upset

U. S. Court Sets Aside Decision of Board in Baltimore.

Holds Annual Reduction at $370,000 Instead of $1,200,000.

Baltimore, May 11 (AP).—A special United States Court today declared invalid the Maryland Public Service Commission's order that the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., of Baltimore, which serves the State, reduce its rate by an aggregate of $1,000,000 to $1,200,000 a year.

The court concluded that the annual reduction should not be more than $370,000.

The decision was given by Circuit Judge Morris A. Soper and District Judges W. Calvin Chestnut and William C. Coleman.

Before the trial both commission and company attorneys stated they were prepared to appeal if the court found against them.

The court's decision was based on its finding of fact that the value of the company's property in Maryland was $39,500,000. The company had contended for a $48,000,000 valuation, while the commission had put the value at approximately $32,000,000.

The commission's valuation had been based on a use of Department of Labor and other commodity index numbers showing a general reduction in values. The court stated that it based its valuation on "the actual amount of money the company had spent for the property" and that it had eliminated a $5,000,000 increase in valuation allowed the company in a decision of 1923.

The court also found that "under present conditions" the company should be allowed to earn 6 per cent.

(Several pictures by Marion Butler depicting the highlights of the May Day Festival at Hood College, Frederick, Md., today, will appear in tomorrow's Post.)

Frederick, Md., May 11 (Spl.).—Final plans for the annual May Day celebration at Hood College tomorrow, the most colorful campus event of the year, were completed today.

Tonight the advance of hundreds of alumnae and friends of the institution arrived. About 3,000 persons from Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia are expected.

The activities will begin at 9 a. m. with a horse show which will include student form riding, a student relay, balloon race, bareback riding and a feature act, entitled "Musical Stalls." The judges will be Miss Benchoff, Dr. R. W. Baer and Dr. C. H. Conley, of Frederick. Miss Ruth Haller and Miss Laura Pitkin, of Frederick, will be in the horseback exhibition.

Archery and Tennis.

From 10:30 until 11:30 a Columbia round of archery and a series of tennis matches between selected players will take place. At this time a baseball game of five innings will be played by the fathers' and daughters' teams, and the members of the former team will play left-handed.

Lunch will be served at 12:30 p. m. in Coblentz Hall.

The afternoon program will start at 2:30 o'clock, and will be in the form of a sixteenth century English festival, at which the May queen and her attendants will be the honored guests. The senior class play, "Gammer Gurton's Needle," a one-act English farce of the sixteenth century, written in verse, will be the main event at the fair.

During the program dances will be presented, including the Jester's Dance, by Miss Rachel McKinley, of Breathedsville, and the traditional May Pole dance. Several pantomime acts will be given.

The music will consist chiefly of old English ballads and dances. During the scene at the village fair two ballad singers will present their numbers at the same time, each endeavoring to sing the louder.

"Aida" to Be Played.

As the May Queen and the ladies and gentlemen of the court approach the stage, the march from Verdi's "Aida" will be played, and as the May Queen is crowned, the traditional "Crowning Song," composed by Miss Miriam Rhoades, of Frederick, an alumna of Hood, will be played.

Miss Gladys Podmore, of Toledo, the May Queen, will be crowned by Miss Esther Brittain, of Trenton, N. J., who was elected Prince Hood. The maid of honor will be Miss Mary Delashmutt, of Chevy Chase, and Miss Mary Lee Beattie, of Maplewood, N. J., will be best man.

Fifth Term Held Goal Of Ritchie

Not Likely to Enter Race for Senator, Report Says.

Official Statement of Plans Expected Within Forty-eight Hours.

Baltimore, May 11 (Spl.).—An announcement by Albert C. Ritchie that he will seek the Democratic nomination for a fifth term was expected momentarily here today.

The Governor has definitely decided to enter the guberantorial race rather than to run for Senator, according to reports from high authority. Exactly what means the Governor will employ to make his announcement is not known. In previous years, he has made public his plans in speeches at important political gatherings, but the belief is that this year he will issue a statement to the press.

Whether this statement will be made tomorrow, or on Sunday, is no known. But it is expected within 48 hours.

The ticket that will run with Gov. Ritchie is expected to be as follows: For attonrey general, State's Attorney Herbert R. O'Connor, of Baltimore City.

For State comptroller, William S. Gordy, jr., the incumbent.

For the United States Senate, Represenalve David J. Lewis, of Cumberland, or Brig. Gen. Milon A. Record, commander of the Maryland National Guard.

Coincident with the announcement of George Ritchie's plans will come an announcement that Attorney General William Preston Lane, of Hagerstown, will not seek renomination. The reason to be given is "press of private business at Hagerstown."

Venue Change Plan Of Murder Defense

Southwest Virginia Trial Is Set for Monday.

Wytheville, Va., May 11 (AP).—The case of the Commonwealth against Henry Bausell, Lebanon newspaper publisher, and his son, Bernace Bausell, charged with the murder of T. Eugene Cornett, Wythe County farmer, at his home near Rural Retreat, January 13, will be called in the Circuit Court of Wythe County Monday.

Defense attorneys announce that they will move for a change of venue and, in the event it is not granted, will ask separate trials. Commonwealth attorneys said that in the event separate trials are determined upon, they will elect to try Bernace Bausell first.

The difficulty in which T. Eugene Cornett and his daughter, Mrs. Virginia Cornett Bausell, the estranged wife of Bernace, were killed, is alleged to have arisen over the custody of Jean, the 4-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bernace Bausell.

How Boy, 12, Seized Union Map In '63, Revealed 71 Years Later

John Cary Didn't Like Confiscation of His Horses, So He Took Maj. Gen. Sedgwich's War Chart From Open Tent.

Strasburg, Va., May 11 (Spl.).—The mystery surrounding the disappearance of a war map of Virginia from the tent of Maj. Gen. John Sedgwick, U. S. A., after the battle of Chancellorsville in 1863, has been solved here with the discovery of the chart among the possessions of the late John Cary, now the property of his son, Walter M. Cary, Strasburg druggist.

Contrary to what many persons have thought, it was no Confederate spy who invaded the Union general's tent and made off with the map from the table where it was spread. Instead, it has been learned that it was John Cary, then a boy of 12 years, who made away with the map because he was angered over treatment accorded him by the Union soldiers.

After Hooker's army had been repulsed at Chancellorsville, Sedgwick's troops were encamped in Culpeper County, on the Dr. Perry farm near the Rappahannock County line.

Sedgwick had been plotting his course northward toward Gettysburg, Pa., using the map as a guide. One day when he returned to camp, it had vanished. Search failed to reveal it.

At that time, John Cary was frequently employed to drive his own and his neighbors' horses over to Sugar Loaf Mountain to hide whenever it was reported that the Yankee troops were near. On one of these trips he was intercepted by a squad of Union soldiers, who seized the horses and drove them to the Union camp, then occupied by Sedgwick's troops.

Angered by the capture of his horses, young Cary followed them into Sedgwick's camp and was passing the general's tent when the latter left it in the company of one of the officers. Slipping in, young Cary looked about him, and believing that the map had some important bearing on the Union general's plans, quickly folded it up, slipped it inside his shirt and left.

The map, 30 by 50 inches, was printed on heavy linen by Lloyd's, of New York, in 1862 and bears the notation, "Only official map approved by the War Department for use in campaigns in Virginia." Important places are underscored in red ink, probably by Gen. Sedgwick.

Wilson Memorial Garden Opened for First Time to Swelling Throng of Valley Visitors

Woodrow Wilson was born in this house at Staunton, Va., then the Presbyterian Manse, December 28, 1856.

Old Presbyterian Manse, President's Birthplace, Attracts Many.

Relics of Wartime Leader Preserved in Shrine at Staunton.

By Marion Butler.

Staunton, Va., May 11.—Like England's lake district and Germany's Rhine country, more tourists every year are making the Valley of Virginia the mecca of their travels. The lure of a past associated with the lives of great men and stirring action attracts them.

This spring, in what was a pioneer town of colonial days, the shrine of a modern figure in American history, is claiming public attention.

Here, at the head of the Shenandoah Valley, the white pillars of the peaceful Presbyterian Manse, the birthplace of Woodrow Wilson, rise.

And here for the first time the Victorian garden, gift of the Garden Club of Virginia, has been opened to the public. Dedicated recently as the Woodrow Wilson Memorial Garden, funds for it were raised during last year's Garden Club Week, and plans were drawn by Charles F. Gillette, Richmond landscape architect.

Garden in Three Terraces.

The garden lies in three terraces to the rear of the Manse. The walks of the lowest terrace form the design of a Victorian bow knot, and are bordered with old-fashioned thyme, lavender, heliotrope and tulips. Old English box hedges, brought from Lynchburg, have been planted, and surrounding the garden is a low brick wall overhung with lilac trees.

A sun dial, the gift of the Colonial Dames of Virginia, marks the garden, and a bronze tablet, erected by the First Presbyterian Church of Staunton, the house.

The Manse, built of brick and colonnaded in nineteenth century style, was erected by Presbyterian congregations in 1846. The contractor and builder was John Fifer, father of a Governor of Illinois. According to a letter, addressed to Charles Catlett, of Staunton, in 1931 by former Gov. Joseph Fifer of Illinois, his father "made the bricks in a yard located on the turnpike about 1 mile out from Staunton."

Wilson Born There.

In this house, which rises two stories in front and three to the rear, President Wilson was born December 28, 1856, in the southeast room downstairs. His father occupied the Manse as Presbyterian minister at Staunton from 1855-1857.

Some pieces of family furnishings stand in the room today. One is a large four-poster bed, used by Mr. Wilson at Prospect Hill while he was president of Princeton University, and given to the Manse by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson. It is covered by a white spread, woven by his mother. Also there are letters written by President Wilson to his family.

A letter to his father is especially prized as one of the few that give insight into the mind and ideals of Wilson before he served as America's leader in a time of chaos. It reveals the spiritual strength nurtured in him by his Presbyterian parents.

Dated December 16, 1868, it reads: "You have given me a love that grows, that is stronger in me now that I am a man than it was when I was a boy, and which will be stronger in me when I am an old man than it is now—a love, in brief, that is rooted and grounded in reason, and not in filial instinct merely—a love resting upon abiding foundations of service, recognizing you as in a certain very real sense, the author of all I have to be grateful for. I bless God for my noble, strong and saintly mother, and for my incomparable father."

Automobile Stored Near.

Another item of interest in the master bedroom of the manse is the Peace Conference photograph of President Wilson, preferred by Mrs. Wilson to all his pictures.

Stored near the manse, ready for resurrection when complete restoration of the building is fulfilled, is the famed automobile bestowed on President Wilson by Washington citizens.

Since 1928 trustees of the Mary Baldwin College at Staunton have owned the manse. It was at Mary Baldwin Seminary (then Augusta Female Seminary) that Woodrow Wilson's two sisters, Ann and Marian, attended school. And the First Presbyterian Church of Staunton, erected in 1818, the same building in which Wilson's father preached and in which President Wilson was baptized, is now part of Mary Baldwin College.

When in 1931, Virginians and tourists asked to have the house opened, a temporary resident custodian, Mrs. J. R. Earnest, was appointed.

Hope has been expressed by many that the birthplace of Woodrow Wilson will be made into a National memorial. Senator Harry F. Byrd heads the National association for this project.

At present, the manse is cared for by the Staunton unit of the Virginia Garden Club and the following officials of Mary Baldwin College, President L. W. Jarman, and the temporary custodian committee, Michael Kivlighan, chairman; A. T. Moore, Albert Shultz, L. L. Sutherland, Dr. Hunter B. Blakely, Mrs. H. McK. Smith, Mrs. Charles K. Brown, Mrs. Clara Hamrich, Mrs. A. Hume Sprinkel, John B. Daffin, treasurer.

Cavalcade Is 4-5 Choice Today in Field of 8 Preakness Starters

Nats Lose 4-3 Game to St. Louis in Tenth, Despite 2 Home Runs

Cronin Aids Browns by Error

His Homer and Phillips' in Vain as Stewart Weakens in 10th.

Campbell's Pinch Hit Off Russell Decides; Clift and Hemsley Star.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post).

THE Browns went down twice and came up three times yesterday, and fished out a 4-to-3 victory over the Nats, who had also been having their ups and downs but who failed to come to the surface in the tenth inning.

Even shrieks of the 5,000 Ladies Day fans were stilled as drama piled on drama in those late innings that saw the Browns sock away the Natts' one-run lead in the ninth and then snatch the game in the tenth when Pinch-Hitter Bruce Catmpbell delivered a single into center field.

They saw the Nats get the tying run on second base, too, in that tenth only to sigh collectively as Joe Cronin, who had alternately been the hero and the goat of the afternoon's proceedings, ended up as the goat with his fly to center field that brought the game to an unsuccessful conclusion.

Cronin Slugs Homer.

Cronin had come out of his batting slump with a great to do in the first inning to establish the Nats in a 2-to-1 lead with a home run into the left field bleachers, with Manush on base, that would have been a home run anywhere in the United States or Canada, but he also contributed, too, three errors, the third of which was directly responsible for the run that tied the score at 2 to 2 in the fifth inning.

It was two innings later that Catcher Eddie Phillips, making his debut with the Nats, put himself in a fair way toward being the game's herto, when he pounded one of Bump Hadley's fast balls far out into left field, where it was caught by a green-sweatered lad sitting in the tenth row of the bleachers.

Phillips' homer gave the Nats a 3-2 lead and Walter Stewart escaped damage in the eighth despite the appearance of Manager Hornsby at the plate as a pinch-hitter with men on second and third. Hornsby smacked a fly ball into deep left center and it took a stiff wind and a heluva catch by Manush to keep two runs away from the Browns.

But the Nats, except for those two home runs by Cronin and Phillips, were doing little damage against Hadley and the Browns returned to the attack in the ninth when Rookie Harland Clift collected his fourth hit of the day, a double past Ossie Bluege that led off the inning.

With the Nats' infield drawn in, looking for a sacrifice from Sammy West, Hornsby gave them the double cross by ordering West to hit away and he drove a whistling grounder against Joe Kuhel's glove for a single. Buddy Myer retrived the ball but couldn't hold it and Hornsby, coaching at third gambled with the ball game and won, when he waved Clift on toward the plate.

I should have mentioned before this, I suppose, that the Browns had originally tied the score back in the fifth when Cronin was seized with the jitters, or something, and threw two errors into the proceedings. This same Clift led off with a single and Cronin permitted West's hard grounder to skip through his legs into center field, putting Clift on second. He advanced to third on Burns' infield out, and then Pepper bounced a slow roller toward Cronin that had all the earmarks of the third out until Cronin's throw pulled Kuhel off the bag while Clift crossed the plate with the run that made the score 2-2.

Deadlocked in Tenth.

nyway, the Browns went into the tenth with the score deadlocked at 3-3, but not for long. After Cronin had started a snappy double play on Mellilo's liber, Stewart appeared to be out of danger, but along came Rollie Hemsley with his fourth hit of the day, his third double, incidentally, and Cronin got Stewart out of there.

He put in Jack Russell, who succeeded in walking Pinch Hitter Garms and then succeeded in pitching a center-field single to Pinch-Hitter Campbell that brought Mr. Hemsley home in a hurry with the winning run.

Hadley had departed the scenes in the eighth when Hornsby hit for him, and Jack Knott got the Nats out in order in the ninth. They faced the eccentric wind-up of Rookie Buck Newsom in the tenth and two were out before Myer revived hopes with a single into left. Then Manush walked but Cronin could only lift a fly into center field where Sammy West stuck it in his pocket.

Department League.

Agriculture went on a hitting rampage in the late innings and slugged out a 14-1 victory in its game with the Union Printers in the Department League. Fuchs led the assault for the winners.

Red Sox Blunders Give Indians Game

Ostermueller Tosses Away Lead; 6-5 in Eleventh.

Boston, May 11 (AP).—Kicking away a safe lead for the third time in nine games, the Boston Red Sox today dropped an 11-inning contest to the Cleveland Indians, 6-5.

The Indians appeared well subdued until the eighth, when Fritz Ostermueller tossed away his 4-1 advantage by passing two batters, giving singles to "Dutch" Holland and Joe Vosmik and then handing Cleveland its tying run by throwing wildly to second base.

Odel Hale's double started Cleveland's winning rally in the eleventh. He scored on Frank Pytlak's single, and Ostermueller was relieved by Dusty Rhodes after Bill Kamm put two on base by belting out the Indians' tenth and last hit of the game. Ed Morgan then gave his former teammates their winning run by missing Rice's grounder, Pytlak crossing the plate with the decisive tally.

The Sox put over a run in the first inning and piled on three more against Right-Hander Mel Harder in the fifth when Bishop, Carl Reynolds, Dusty Coke and Morgan singled and Bill Knickerbocker threw wild to second base. Monte Pearson relieved Harder in the eighth and struck out five Boston batters in the last four innings to gain credit for the victory. He looked bad only in the eleventh, when the Red Sox scored their fifth run on Morgan's two-bagger and Bob Seeds' single while batting for Rhodes.

Braves Beat Reds, 8-5, After 4 Runs in Eighth

Cincinnati, May 11 (AP).—The Cincinnati Reds lost to the hard-hitting Boston Braves, 8 to 5, today.

A disastrous eighth inning blasted the home team's chances. Singles by Lee and Betts, and Hogan's triple, drove Bennie Frey to the showers after allowing 15 hits, and Berger's double off Benton made four runs that inning's total.

Thereafter, the best the Reds could do was not enough, although Moore singled and Hafey clouted a home run in the eighth, and singles added another run in the ninth.

Combs Clouts End to Hopes of White Sox in Deadlock.

Chapman's Homer With 2 Aboard Gives 4-Run Start in First.

NEWW ORK, May 11 Y(AP).—The ankees and the White Sox waged the longest extra-inning battle of the current major league season today before the Yanks manufactured a run in the fourteenth, to win, 7 to 6.

The winning tally came when Earl Combs clouted a triple, the second hit in five innings off Whitlow Wyatt's hurling, and Sammy Byrd brought him home with a single.

The Yanks got a four-run start in the first, when Ben Chapman hit a home with two aboard, but Danny Macfayden became wild after giving three hits in six innings and was removed for Harry Smythe. The Sox nicked Smythe and Johnny Murphy for four tallies, to tie the score in the eighth before Murphy and Wyatt went into their mound duel.

Frostburg Gets Pitcher And Infielders in Deal

Cumberland, Md., May 11 (Spl.). The acquisition of Infielders Bobby Shaffer and Albert (Buck) Bruner and Pitcher Jack Sheirer in exchange for Andy Dunn, outfielder, was announced by Russell (Mike) Diehl, manager of the Frostburg Demons of the Interstate Baseball League.

Shaffer, Bruner and Sheirer, who live at Hyndman, Pa., had signed contracts with Corrigansville and Frostburg before the season got under way and were barred from playing in the Interstate League for signing two contracts.

Since Bruner and Shaffer are regarded as two of the outstanding infielders playing amateur ball in this region, Manager "Vic" May deemed it best to trade them to Frostburg rather than prevent their playing in the eight-club circuit. Sheirer was thrown in for good measure. Bruner and Shaffer played short and third base, respectively, for the 1933 Corgs, second-half champions of the Interstate League.

Tourney Winner

ROGER PEACOCK, champion of the host club, who yesterday defeated Claude Rippy in the finals of the Indian Spring Invitation tournament.

Peacock Wins Over Rippy, 5 and 4

Captures Indian Spring Club Tourney After Beating Shorey.

By Dave Herman.

ROGER PEACOCK won his own club's invitation golf tournament yesterday at Indian Spring. He defeated Claude Rippy, young public links star, 5 and 4, in the 18-hole finals for his first championship of 1934 after two unsuccessful starts.

Rippy didn't offer much resistance once Peacock swung into the lead, and the transplanted Carolinian found himself hopelessly outclassed at the turn, at which stage of the match he was 4 down.

Erratic with his tee shots, and inconsistent with his approaches, Rippy was unable to cope with Peacock's booming drives and deadly second shots that split the pin on virtually every hole the Indian Spring ace won.

Rippy Plays Gamely.

Even in defeat Rippy won the plaudits of the galleryites by his game fight and unexpectedly brilliant showing in his second District invitation tournament. Following his surprise 1 up victory over Gene Vinson in the quarter-finals Thursday, Rippy yesterday morning added another feather in his golfing cap by eliminating Don O'Brien, of Georgetown University, the medalist and conqueror of defending Champion Harry Pitt.

Rippy's 2-and-1 conquest of O'Brien was a big surprise, since O'Brien, after leading in the qualifying round and shooting as he did against his first two opponents, appeared headed for the finals. The Carolinian was not to be denied. He kept plugging away doggedly after being 1 down at the turn, and 2 down at the tenth, reeling off six straight pars, catching the Baltimorean at the fifteenth, winning the sixteenth and climaxing the match on the seventeenth with a par 3.

Peacock Beats Shorey.

Peacock entered the finals by defeating a warm rival, John Shorey, 2 to 1, in a hectic struggle that was featured by Peacock's steady play on the sixteenth and seventeenth holes. The host golfer was 1 up rounding the bend after shooting a sizzling 33, two under par. Shorey himself scored a 36.

Shorey won the tenth to even the match. They halved the eleventh, and Peacock took the twelfth to become 1 up. The Kenwood lad unfolded his magic putter and ran down two sparkling 20-footers for birdies to capture the thirteenth and fourteenth and go 1 up. Peacock took the fifteenth with a par 5, and on the sixteenth played a magnificent full 2 iron shot out of the rough to the green for his par 5 and another win. On the seventeenth Peacock spanked his spoon to within 10 feet of the pin and won the hole with a 3 as Shorey was short. Peacock was even par for the 17 holes.

Against Rippy, Peacock waded into the lead with a par 4 on the second when Rippy overshot the green. Roger won the fourth with a par 4 and was conceded his 4 on the fifth when Rippy was trapped on his second and overplayed the green on his third.

Rippy Wins Back Hole.

Rippy won back a hole by sinking a 10-footer for a birdie deuce on the sixth. He lost the long seventh to a conceded birdie 4, as Peacock chipped dead. Peacock went 4 up at the ninth, making his par 3, after Rippy laid him a partial stymie.

They halved the next 3 holes, and on the thirteenth Roger played two nifty shots to the carpet for his 4 to Rippy's 5. Both were on the green on the 185-yard fourteenth, which they halved in 3's and the match ended.

U. S. Walker Golfers Top British

Yankees Win in 4 of 7 Foursomes to Take Commanding Lead.

Moreland, Westland, in Rally, Swing Tide to American Team.

By Gale Talbot.

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, May 11 (AP).—Uncle Sam's young and old Walker Cup men twisted the British Lion's tail properly today in the opening foursome skirmishes, winning three out of four matches and simplifying the task of keeping the international trophy on American shores for another two years.

All Capt. Francis Ouimet's golfing ambassadors need tomorrow is an even break in the eight singles matches to clinch victory for the eighth time since the biennial series were inaugurated in 1922. Even the most sanguine British supporters are willing to concede them that much after a day in which Ouimet and George T. Dunlap, jr., the American amateur champion, were the victims of the lone British triumph.

Turning Point.

The turning point in the foursome came this afternoon when Harry Bentley and Eric Fiddian, the No. 3 British team, lit a fire under Gus Moreland, of Dallas, Tex., and Jack Westland, of Chicago, by winning two out of three holes on the outgoing nine and melting the Americans' lead.

"Let's get started," Moreland suggested to his sphinxlike partner, and from there on their British opponents didn't have time to get their guard up until the swarthy Texas insurance salesman and the Chicago broker had closed the match on the thirty-first green, winning, 6 and 5. From the twenty-second hole to the finish Moreland and Westland, taking turns at stroking the ball, were 1 under par for Scotland's most difficult course.

The overwhelming 8 and 6 triumph of Johnny Goodman, American open champion, and W. Lawson Little, clouting Californian, over Roger Wethered and Cyril Tolley was virtually a slaughter of the innocents. Neither Tolley nor Wethered, who up to today had never been beaten in Walker Cup foursome play, could knock the ball in a barrel on the green. Their lustiest drives were greatly outranged by their young American rivals, and the Britons' iron play was sadly off form.

Only 3 Over Par.

When Wethered wasn't trying to hoist one of Tolley's wild drives out of a bunker, Tolley was feebly striving to lift his partner's approach out of gorse-covered ground. Under the circumstances it was a waltz for the Americans, who were onyy 3 over par for the 30 holes.

The third American victory was scored by the veteran combination of H. Chandler Egan and Max Marston, whose combined ages fall a few years short of a century. They took into camp the Hon. Michael Scott, 56-year-old British captain and amateur champion, and Sam McKinlay, who succumbed on the thirty-fourth hole, 3 and 2.

The American team owed the veterans' victory largely to Egan's phenomenal approaches from all distances. Time and again the Pacific star, who won the United States amateur title for the first time 30 years ago, broke his opponents' hearts with roll-up shots that stopped dead at the pin after it appeared the British had won the hole.

After gaining a one-hole lead at the twenty-seventh, Egan and Marston started to link a chain of pars which their rivals could not match. They won on the thirty-fourth when Scott's despairing putt for a birdie failed to drop.

Dogged Uphill Fight.

The lone casualty in the American ranks was the No. 2 combination of Ouimet and Dunlap, who were vanquished by Eric McRuvie and Jack McLean, the latter champion of both Ireland and Scotland.

While beaten 4 and 2, after a dogged, uphill fight, Ouimet and Dunlap were far from disgraced as they encountered what was generally considered to be John Bull's finest pair of young golfers.

Neither American was shooting his best game and they could not overcome McRuvie and McLean's two up lead at noon. The contest ended on the thirty-fourth green, where Ouimet conceded the match after he and his partner had taken three strokes and their ball was still 12 feet away from the hole.

"They were just too good for us," Ouimet smiled.

One of the treats denied the huge crowd, which overran the course during the day and caused the marshals trouble, came when the pudgy and powerful Tolley dodged the driving issue with Little. There had been considerable pre-match argument as to which wallops the ball farther and Tolley refused to be drawn into a side contest.

Although arrangements were made last night for his arrival, the Prince of Wales failed to put in an appearance at the matches, but wired the Royal and Ancient Golf Club that he would be on hand tomorrow for the singles warfare.

Va. U. Alumni Shift Set-up In Athletics

Director to Have Full Responsibility; Lack of Control Scored.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., May 11 (Spl.).—The fires of the recent athletic upheaval at the University of Virginia were kindled anew today by the action of the board of manager of the Alumni Association.

A statement released today brought to a head the agitation which resulted in the resignation of Fred Dawson as head football coach and the placing of Gus Tebell a shead coach for the coming season. James Driver, director of athletics at the university, who was under fire, was given a vote of confidence by President Newcomb and members of the board of visitors.

Under the new proposed regulations, the director of athletics will no longer be a member of the faculty. The reaction against the present athletic set-up has been caused in a large measure because of Virginia's poor football rating, despite excellent showings against Columbia and Navy last year Sentiment was high when Virginia was trounced last year by Ohio State by a score of 75 to 0.

Dissatisfaction Voiced.

The statement by the board follows:

"After careful investigation and consideration, the board of managers of the Alumni Association of the University of Virginia has come to the conclusion that the present athletic set-up at the university is fundamentally wrong and impracticable of efficient administration. There is such an overlapping of authority and such a lack of centralized responsibility that confusion and inefficiency results, and when the system breaks it is impossible to place the responsibility therefor.

"This was made manifest at recent meetings of some members of the 'V' Club and the advisory council, where such uncertainty existed as to responsibility for various and sundry functions as to thoroughly confuse those present and prevent them from making at that time any constructive recommendations. The members of this board attended these meetings purely as observers, but they came away with the general feeling of despair, a feeling which is shared by many of the alumni who are making sincere efforts to be constructive and helpful."

The board outlined powers to be vested in the athletic council, composed of alumni, faculty members and students, which would considerably lessen the authority of that group. The object of this move is to place full responsibility in the hands of the athletic director.

The Marylanders ran up a three-run lead in the second, when McAboy's home run also scored Nelson and Wolf's single scored Benner. Three more were netted in the fifth with singles by Wolf and Love and a double by McAboy. Nelson's two-bagger and singles by Love and Chase were good for two tallies in the seventh.

Fervid Triumphs in Pimlico Feature After Ned O., Favorite, Quits in Stretch

Fabius 2d, Nosed Out At Wire

Porter Puts Up Vigorous Ride on Fervid to Win Stretch Battle.

Rocky Run, From Barn of Mrs. Whitney, Is 'Chase Winner.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Correspondent).

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, May 11.—A claiming race, carrying the usual $800 in purse money, was tagged "The Florence Reed Trophy Race" and presented to some 8,000 turf fans as the day's racing feature at this historic track. We will have to give Pimlico credit for making a good show of a race that might well have been the first or the last on the program. Florence Reed, the actress who has the leading role in a show downtown, was in the judges' stand and Mayor Howard W. Jackson climbed the stairs to present the trophy to Mrs. J. M. Black, the winning owner.

Ned O. Heavily Backed.

Some idea of the class of the feature may be derived from the fact that Fervid, a mare which has been knocking around in claiming circles for some four years, was the winner, with Fabius second and Chips third. The public, represented by a majority of Baltimoreans and a sprinkling of those who came a day early for the Preakness, played Ned O. as if the race was already run.

Ned O., like the Lockraven Dam, is one of the Baltimore institutions and it is considered treason to bet on anything else if you live in this city of monuments and white door-stoops.

However, Ned O. after leading stopped as if tied to the sixteenth pole and the three money horses went on to battle it out for the purse.

Whatever the Florence Reed Trophy Race, thank you, lacked in class, it made up for in competition for Fervid, Fabius and Chips were all making a dive for the wire at the finish. Fervid won by a nose. It was beautiful to see the horses and jockeys "all out" and probably will outshine the finish of the Preakness tomorrow.

Porter Rides Well.

Fervid had Earl Porter, who along with Joe Jacobs, is fast becoming an unpopular rider hereabouts, in the saddle and he was certainly the peer of the second part as far as credit for the victory was concerned. He was a battering, arm-swinging piece of jockey machinery in the stretch, and it is doubtful if a better exhibition could have been mustered from the boys now entrusted with piloting winners hereabouts.

Fervid paid a $13.80 mutuel.

For the second straight day, a hunter came up from the Virginia farms to show the steeplechasers a thing or two about the art of clearing hedges and running between jumps. Today, it was Rocky Run, the property of Mrs. John Hay Whitney, which ran away with the daily timbertopping exhibition dubbed the Warrenton Steeplechase. Ridden by W. Bethel, Rocky Run had a two-length margin over Axon, from the E. K. Bryson string and some five lengths over Spinach, the public choice. Only one mishap marked the race, Suspect, making his first start over the jumps, lost rider W. King at the tenth fence.

Rocky Run Tip.

Rocky Run was not the secret that was Our Friend yesterday in the Billy Barton Handicap. Although his prowess was not known early enough for him to get in the various consensus, word about Rocky Run was scattered over the paddocks and whispers along the stands. This resulted in the 4-year-old gelding being backed down to 9-5 on the board. He paid $5.90 which was cheap at half the price.

Axon and Spinach were leaders at various stages until Bethel decided to loose his grip on Rocky Run. The gelding, jumping nicely, moved up as Spinach tired and went on to draw away from Axon after the last jump.

Sherfy Ranked No. 1.

Laurence Sherfy, George Washington University student, was placed first and his brother, Raphael, second in the official District ping-pong rankings announced last night.

ANACREON, rushed hard to enter a forward position, went into a winning lead when reaching the home stretch, and under urging, held SUN TEAPARTY safe. Latter improved her position on the outside, and then finished determinedly. PALASA was hard ridden the entire trip. She came again when straightened into the home stretch. KINDRED SPIRIT, forced to race on the outside, closed a good gap.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ROCKY RUN, $5.90, $5.40, $3.80; AXON, $9.20, $5.10; SPINACH, $4.20.

ROCKY RUN, reserved for the first mile, went to the leaders with a rush when released from restraint, fenced boldly when in command, and steadied over his fences, finished with speed in reserve. AXON was sent into command soon after the start, jumped nicely, and then continued stoutly when put to a drive. SPINACH, messed about in the first mile, took an easy lead at the seventh fence, but stumbled at several of his jumps thereafter, and tired. DEPART, restrained off the early pace, responded when put to a drive, but could not threaten the leaders. MATAGAIN was held safe. BLUE ZIP quit. SUSPECT landed badly at the tenth fence and lost his rider.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. The Govans (second division). For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:50. Off at 3:51½. Two-dollar mutuels paid—TIGHT WAD, $10.30; $4.80, $3.30; LAST SIGNAL, $6.30, $4.10; VACILLATE, $3.90.

TIGHT WAD, squeezed back midway of the back stretch, was taken to the outside thereafter, reached the leaders with good speed, and in a rame finish, was up in the closing strides. LAST SIGNAL, rated in front while holding a brief lead, continued with good courage when placed to a strong drive. VACILLATE secured racing room on the inside in the final five-sixteenths, took a slight lead in the closing furlong, but hung approaching the finish. MEROVECH was unable to improve his position when stoutly urged. BELLE FILLE, in tight quarters soon after the start, swung to the outside, and finished fast. DONNA DULCIN went evenly. THE GEN stopped badly.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—FERVID, $13.80, $7.00, $4.40; FABIUS, $12.80, $6.00; CHIPS, $4.40.

FERVID, kept close to the early leaders, moved up gamely when put to a drive, and closing stoutly, was up in the last sixteenth. FABIUS, far out of contention, swung around his company, and finished with a belated rush on the outside. He was going much the strongest at the end. CHIPS worked hard way up steadily, and finished in determined fashion. NED O., rated in front, withstood early contention from ACCENT, then moved clear, but stopped suddenly approaching the finish. PRETTY WISE was gaining slowly at the end. CHEROKEE SAL could not menace the leaders. MARGE stopped, as did RACE STREET.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and seventy yards. Purse, $800. Maidens. The Equality. For 3-year-olds. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:54. Off at 4:55. Two-dollar mutuels paid—FIRELOCK, $3.80, $3.30, $2.50; GITAPP, $5.90, $3.50; GALON LAD, $3.50.

FIRELOCK, squeezed back at the half-mile mark, went to the outside thereafter for racing room, where the leaders down quickly to open up a winning lead, and had something in reserve at the end. GITAPP, rated close up with the pace, came willingly when hard ridden. GALON LAD, displaced midway of the final turn, continued gamely, and outfinished BANNERS FLYING. Latter, carried wide at the first turn, moved into contention with a rush, but flattened out badly when the real test came. SKIMALONG was unable to enter contention. GOLDEN VEIN stopped.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:24. Off at 5:28½. Winner, B. A. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MODERN TIMES, $4.30, $3.20, $3.20; PENCADER, $4.20, $4.10; BROWN SINNER, $6.40.

MODERN TIMES, eased out of tight quarters when leaving the back stretch, went to the outside to reach the pacemaker, took command entering the home stretch, and under severe pressure, just lasted to win. PENCADER, far back, worked his way up fast in the last five furlongs, and was wearing the winner down gradually at the end. BROWN SINNER was kept within striking distance of the leaders early, then closed with good courage. LAURETTA NASH was hard hustled to get to the front, and was used up setting the pace. GAY PARTY showed a good effort.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:54. Off at 5:55. Winner, A. BROWN WISDOM, going in his best form, sprinted into an easy lead when reaching the back stretch, withstood early contention from FAIR BILLY, and had enough in reserve to stall off LONE HAND. Latter worked his way to the leaders on the inside, and then came with good speed approaching the finishing line. BARCELONA PETE raced in contention from the beginning, and held on well at the end.

Stocks Decline To New Low At 75.8 Level

List Yields Eight-tenths in Quiet Trading; Sales, 995,500 Shares.

New York, May 11 (AP).—The stock market tried to rally for a time today, but soon lapsed into lethargic trading, which gave way to a little flurry of selling in the final minutes.

Net changes were largely fractional, although there was a sprinkling of losses of a point or two, which was sufficient to depress the price average of 90 representative issues 0.8 of a point to 75.8, a new low since December. But the turnover was only 995,500 shares, less than half yesterday's.

While some traders were inclined to angle for a technical rally in the early dealings, lack of distinctly bullish business news, and active profit-taking in the wheat market, worked against such a development, and discouraged liquidation together with short selling developed in the last few minutes.

Retail Trade Favorable.

The day's grist of business and trade news included a favorable weekly review of retail trade by Dun & Bradstreet, which said the past week had brought a marked improvement in distribution, with the unseasonably cool weather giving way to a warm spell which brought out shoppers in encouraging numbers.

The weekly report on freight car loadings and estimates of automobile production, however, were less encouraging.

Cram's Automotive Reports said "increasing evidence that the country's peak operating levels for the year have passed was contained in this week's production summary, which revealed another substantial decline in total output." Production was estimated at 79,305 units, off 10,972 from the revised figure for last week. Cram's said incomplete returns, however, indicated a little better trend in retail sales of cars, presumably reflecting the more favorable weather.

Selling Hits Rails.

A little selling came into some of the rails in the late dealings, as traders evidently felt that the drought in the Middle West augured ill for freight volumes on some of the carriers.

Northern Pacific lost 1½, Santa Fe about 2 and Union Pacific 3. Among the Eastern trunk lines, New York Central slid back 1½, but Pennsylvania was about steady.

During the morning effort to rally, several issues got up fractions to a point, with oils, motors, foods, chemicals and some of the metals participating, while utilities and rails were sluggish. Little was left of this rise at the finish, however. American Can closed a point higher, and the Radio preferred issues were again firm, the Class A stock gaining a couple of points, net. McKeesport Tinplate also closed 2 higher.

Among issues finishing 1 to 2 lower were Allied Chemical, Chrysler, American Telephone, Dupont, Goodyear, Montgomery-Ward, Western Union, Youngstown Sheet and others. Case lost nearly 3 points, but International Harvester only a fraction. U. S. Steel was off ¾ at the close.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Analysts Credit Stock Market Weakness to Bad Trade Outlook, Uncertainty Over Governmental Policies, Exchange Bill.

By Ralph West Robey.

Among stock market analysts in New York the decline of this week is credited on the whole to three things: First, the increasing volume of evidence that business has passed the seasonal peak and now is on the downgrade; secondly, a growing uncertainty over Governmental policies of the next few months and the fear that we are faced with still more regimentation and experimentation; thirdly, the rather widespread, although more or less indefinite, apprehension over the possible effects of the security exchange bill.

If one could assign definite weights to these factors it appears the greatest importance would be given to the first one listed. On all sides in the New York financial district one now hears bearish prophesies as to the future of business. In so far as I have discovered no one questions that the decline will be more than seasonal. It merely is a question of how much more than seasonal it is to be. Among the more optimistic, 5 per cent is a commonly quoted figure. Others estimate it will be as much as 20 per cent.

Business Figures Still Reflect Better Conditions.

To those who give only casual attention to business statistics such prophecies may appear strange, for it is true that several of the major indicators of the trend still are climbing, and the Federal Reserve Board indices continue to reflect improvement. The reason for the discrepancy between this record and the views of the analysts is partly because of unusual forces tending to hold up particular lines of business and partly because of the shortcomings in the corrections of the indices for seasonal variations.

Thus in the case of steel production it is emphasized that current buying is anticipating the needs of the third quarter to an unusual degree. This anticipation is the result of a desire of the buyers to get their orders filled before the announced price advance takes place. Steel scrap prices, which are taken as a reliable indicator of the trend in the industry, recently have shown marked weakness.

Seasonal corrections are viewed as important because the spring improvement has lasted beyond the usual date. In consequence the normal corrections give a false picture of the actual situation, tending to hold the indices at an abnormally high figure. Later they will work in the opposite direction.

Reports on Governmental Policy Show Inconsistency.

The uncertainty over future Governmental policies is the inevitable consequence of trying to conclude where we are headed from the inconsistent stories coming out of Washington. To some extent there has been such inconsistency from the start of this Administration, but many people in the street feel that it is greater today than at almost any earlier period. Time after time recently the entire outlook has been changed overnight. A notable example have been the reports this week on silver. On Monday it was stated nothing was to be done, on Tuesday the President had agreed to a far-reaching program, on Wednesday the whole program was in a deadlock.

Apprehension over the stock exchange bill probably is the least important of the three factors mentioned. So far as I can determine it amounts in the final analysis to little more than disliking the idea of a Governmental group having a whip-hand over the market at all times.

Foreign Markets.

(Associated Press.)

London—Trading on the stock exchange was fairly active today. Gilt-edged securities were steadier, and German bonds improved. Mining shares held generally firm, while rubber stocks were dull despite the rise in the price of that commodity. Industrials were supported, but transatlantic issues were uncertain. The market closed steady.

Paris—A buoyant tone prevailed on the bourse after yesterday's holiday. Rentes improved on the likelihood of a government victory at Clermont-Ferrand. Young loan issues were feeble. The closing was firm.

Berlin—Business on the bourse was quieter today. Prices developed irregularity with some slight declines being recorded. The market closed dull.

Wool Markets.

Boston, May 11 (A.P.). (U. S. Dept. of Agriculture).—A very moderate amount of business was transacted in Boston on new fleece wools for future delivery. This was mostly one-half cent grease basis below the prices asked on old fleeces in this market. Strictly combing Ohio and similar eighth new fleeces sold occasionally, to be graded for future delivery on grades from fine to 48s, 50s, ¾ blood, at around 32 cents in the grease. Very little spot fleece wool was sold, for there appeared to be no urgent demand.

Bank of France.

Paris, May 11 (A.P.).—The weekly statement of the Bank of France shows the following changes in francs: Gold increased 421,000,000; sight balances abroad increased 1,000,000; bills discounted at home decreased 758,000,000; bills bought abroad increased 30,000,000; advances increased 107,000,000; circulation increased 196,000,000; current accounts decreased 292,000,000. Rate of discount, 3 per cent.

New York, May 11 (AP).—Government securities ran counter to the general bond market today and some issues made new highs for the year before realizing caused a slight recession.

High-grade domestic bonds were steady, but secondary issues continued downward, although the losses were mainly confined to a 1 to 2 point range.

Trading activity in Government issues was on a moderately reduced scale, $4,900,000 changing hands, compared with a turnover of $7,400,000 yesterday.

Sales Volume Down.

The day's total transactions in all listed loans totaled $12,782,000 par value, compared with an aggregate of $18,201,000 the day before. The average for 60 domestic corporate bonds declined four-tenths of a point to 85.6.

Home Owners' Loan 4s were bid up to the highest price on record at 100.26, up five-thirty-seconds, and a new high also was made by Federal Farm Mortgage 4¼s, which closed at 102.7, up five-thirty-seconds of a point. Treasury issues and Liberties were about evenly divided between small gains and losses on the day. Treasury 3s declined a trifle, although others in the group attained new high levels before easing fractionally.

High-grade utility and railroad issues were steady, including American Telephone 5s, Consolidated Gas 5s, Detroit Edison 5s, Pacific Telephone 5s and Union Pacific first 4s. International Agricultural Chemical 5s gained 2¼ points.

Speculative Issues Lower.

Second-grade and speculative issues were mostly lower. Losses of 1 to 2 points were recorded in obligations of the New Haven Railroad, Chicago & North Western, St. Paul, Pere Marquette, and Great Northern.

Colon Oil 6s broke 6¼ points to 58¾, although the turnover was small. Houston Oil 5½s yielded 1½ points to close at 81¼.

A feature of the foreign group was a 2-point advance in Polish 7s to 118. Narrow changes occurred in German issues. French 7s improved 1¼ points, but Royal Dutch 4s declined a point.

Wheat Slumps Under Drives Of Profit Sales

Forecasts of Rain Aid Declines; Corn and Oats Drop.

Chicago, May 11 (AP).—Somersaulting backward almost 5 cents a bushel after jumping nearly 3 cents, the wheat market today closed nervous 1⅛ to 2 cents under yesterday's finish.

Rushes to grab profits on new advances were a feature, together with forecasts of possible moisture tonight over parts of the Dakotas, Nebraska and Kansas. Breakdown of the world wheat conference at London had also an unsettling influence.

Decidedly larger volume of speculative trading was apparent, and was associated with the circumstance that a tax reduction from 5 cents to 3 cents per $100 in grain futures dealings went into effect today. Other cereals rose and fell with wheat, corn closing 1½ to 1⅝ net lower and oats 1¼ to 1½ off. Provisions finished unchanged to a rise of 10 cents.

Predictions of Showers.

Although predicitions of showers accompanied the stampede to realize profits, the position of the wheat market had been rendered shaky by general notice that values were up almost 8 cents in two days and 17 cents up during the past fortnight.

Under such circumstances, the majority of traders switched suddenly to the selling side.

Earlier, however, the market was dominated by authoritative statements that notwithstanding a huge cut of more than 30,000,000 bushels shown in latest official estimates of the 1934 prospective winter wheat crop, the greater part of irreparable damage from drought, heat and dust had been done since May 1, and was not taken account of in the Government report.

Crop Loss Still Stressed.

Despite the late setback in the wheat market, friends of higher prices continued to emphasize that official estimates wholly failed to measure the injury suffered by crops since May 1.

It was asserted that on thousands of acres the domestic winter wheat crop had reached the breaking point, with havoc visible in the rapid spread of fired out areas and with the outlook for spring wheat equally as critical. On the other hand, ending of drought in Rumania and collapse of the world wheat conference at London served in some degree as an offset, and made traders give heed to talk that price advances had been too rapid for at least the time being.

Country offerings of corn today were somewhat larger than of late, but were generally held above the market. Oats gave way with corn and wheat notwithstanding that the new crop outlook for oats was precarious.

Provisions were responsive to Eastern buying and to upturns of hog values.

Spain Offers Future Outlet For U. S. Eggs

That Spain offers an outlet for surplus American eggs is pointed out in a report from Consul Renwick S. McNiece, Vigo, made public by the Commerce Department.

Fresh eggs represent one of the most important items in Spanish import trade, the value of receipts running into substantial sums. Eggs are imported from a number of different sources, including Rumania, Turkey, Poland, Bulgaria and even from Argentina and Uruguay.

Spanish egg dealers, the report states, have expressed surprise that exporters in the United States have made no effort to participate in this trade. It is understood that American eggs are marketed in Argentina, but so far none have been offered on the Spanish market.

The Spanish government is now engaged in the formulation of quotas on various imported products, the quotas to be allotted to those countries between which and Spain there is a more or less balanced exchange of trade. As far as is known there is at present no restriction on eggs from the United States.

Dye Output Indicates Industrial Activity Rise

The increased production and trade in dyestuffs reported from dye-producing countries indicates greater world activity in textile and other industries consuming dyes, according to C. C. Concannon, chief of the Commerce Department's Chemical Division.

Production of dyestuffs in France in 1933 totaled 10,900 metric tons compared with 10,150 tons in 1932 and 9,200 tons in 1931; Italian production increased from 5,700 metric tons in 1932 to 6,200 tons in 1933. Japan's production of synthetic dyes increased from 1,552 metric tons in 1931 to 4,642 tons in the following year and to 7,690 tons in 1933.

Hides—Trade interests hear that some light native cow hides have sold in the West at one-half cent below the previous quotation.

Kawagoe Captures Purse at Jamaica

Noses Out Patchpocket in Woodmere Feature.

Jamaica Race Track, May 11 (AP).—Kawagoe, chestnut son of Sickle, won the Woodmere Purse, six-furlong feature, here today. With Jimmy Hunter outriding Allen Tipton, Kawagoe nosed out the three-time winner, G. W. Ogle's Patchpocket, for the purse. The Dorwood Stable's filly, Miss Merriment, was third, five lengths away. Kawagoe paid 7 to 2 and his time was 1:11 4-5. Patchpocket ruled favorite at 11 to 10.

Kawagoe, along with the more illustrious Chicstraw, is eligible to represent G. D. Widener in the Belmont Stakes. Patchpocket appeared to be slightly bothered in the stretch drive and Tipton claimed a foul, but it was not allowed.

Miss Merriment made good use of her high early foot, but she could not get far enough away from Kawagoe. Glendye tried to keep up, but dropped back early. Patchpocket began his move around the bend and drew up on the leaders at the turn for home.

Koike Cuts 200-Meter Record in Manila Swim

Manila, May 11 (AP).—Reizo Koike, Japanese swimmer who set a new Olympic record at Los Angeles in 1932 for the 200-meter breast stroke, was credited unofficially with a new world mark for the same swim today at the Far Eastern Olympic games here.

He shuttled the distance in the 50-meter pool at Rizal Stadium in a tryout heat in 2 minutes 43.8 seconds. The recognized record, made by Leonard Spence at Chicago in 1931, in a 25-meter tank, is 2:44.60.

Koike's time at Los Angeles was 2:44.9, in the semifinals. In the finals he was beaten by his countryman, Yoshiyuki Tsuruta, in 2:45.4.

Maranville Told Broken Leg May End Baseball Career

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 11 (AP). "Rabbit" Maranville proved himself again today one of the gamest players in the National pastime—taking with a grin his doctor's pronouncement that an imperfectly healed broken leg bone would keep him from rejoining the Boston Braves this season and possibly put him on the baseball shelf for the rest of his life.

The cast, which has been on his left leg since early in April, when he slid into home at the Braves' training camp and fractured both bones, was removed yesterday and an X-ray taken.

Examination today showed that the small bone had parted again, making an operation and possible wiring together necessary. The large bone had knitted nicely.

The "Rabbit" said he was going to take the advice Connie Mack once had given him: "Don't quit until they make you." He telegraphed Emil Fuchs, the Braves' owner, at Washington, and told him there was hardly a chance that he would be able to play again this season.

"I have let nature take its course all my life and I'm going to keep on," philosophized the "Rabbit." "If the leg don't make the grade this time I guess I'll hang up the old glove and make the best of it."

He will go to the General Hospital tomorrow and probably stay there two weeks. He probably can be removed after six weeks and if the break has healed properly the month-long limbering-up period would see the season most over.

"If I can get in there and coach for a bit, I'll be satisfied, just so long as it had to be this way," he said. "But I'm not through until I've had a good chance to try out this leg after it heals and see how I go. Time enough to talk about quitting the game then."

A's Lose to Tigers After 5 Runs in 5th

Foxx Makes Sixth Homer; Detroit Wins, 10 to 5.

PHILADELPHIA, May 11 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers evened the series at a game apiece and broke the Athletics' winning streak of four straight by beating the Mackmen, 10 to 5, in a slugfest today.

The A's overcame a 5 to 0 lead and tied the score in a fifth-inning rally which Higgins opened with a home run and Jimmy Foxx wound up by hitting his sixth home run of the season with two on base.

Detroit broke the tie with a run in the seventh and cinched the game with four more runs in the ninth, two counting on a home run by Gehringer. Cochrane hit for the circuit in the second inning.

Cavalcade Is Held 4-5 in Preakness

Capacity Crowd Expected.

The Maryland Jockey Club has made arrangements for handling one of the largest crowds in recent years, which means that upward of 40,000 fans will attempt to see the race from some place in the "Old Hilltop" course.

If eight start, the race will have a gross value of $30,000, with the winner receiving $25,675.

Almost as interesting as the race between the equine bluebloods will be the attempt of "Uncle" Mack Garner to win another stake that has escaped his brilliant horsemanship during 20 years in the saddle. He will be up on Cavalcade, with Dominick Bellizzi, a star of the younger generation of jockeys, riding High Quest.

Two jockeys, Sunny Workman and Charley Kurtsinger, will be after their second victory. Workman, who won by Victorian in 1928, will be up on Spy Hill, while Kurtsinger, who scored with Head Play last year, will throw a leg over Agraran.

Frederick High Beats Williamsport, 15 to 8

Frederick Md., May 11 (Spl.).—Frederick High School defeated Williamsport (Md.) High at Cadet Field, 15 to 8. Williamsport got next to Droneburg in the first inning when two errors, a double and a home run by Kelly counted for three runs. Hickman then relieved Droneburg and held the Washington County team hitless for four innings. Johnny James finished the game.

After going scoreless in the first frame Frederick settled the issue in the second when a single, five doubles, two errors, two walks, triple and home run yielded 13 tallies. Seventeen men batted in one inning, a record for the home team. Williamsport scored five runs in the final session. The game was called at the end of the seventh inning.

Paul Dean Gives Giants 3-2 Defeat

Cards' Hurler Wins in Duel With Hubbell.

St. Louis, May 11 (AP).—Paul Dean, younger member of the Cardinals' pitching brothers, gained a brilliant 10-inning victory over Carl Hubbell, New York's ace southpaw today, to lead St. Louis to 3-to-2 victory and to third place in the National League standing.

Each flinger allowed nine hits; Dean walked three and fanned five to Hubbell's one pass and seven whiffings, but the St. Louisan was more expert in scattering the blows. The victory, incidentally, gave the Dean family a clean sweep over the Giants, as Brother Dizzy shut them out Wednesday.

The triumph was the Cardinals' fifth in a row, including three over the world's champions, and their twelfth in their last 13 games. It ILt broke a tie with New York to give them undisputed possession of third place in the standing and a virtual tie with Pittsburgh for second place, a half game behind Chicago.

A tuned bell must not only be in tune with other bells in the set, but also in tune with itself. In a well tuned bell there are at least five distinct tones, all of which sound when the bell is struck. If the bell is properly tuned these several notes will harmonize. The note of a bell, then, is really a chord.

The notes of a bell are called the hum note, fundamental, and nominal, and the third and fifth to the fundamental. In the case of a C bell the hum note, fundamental and nominal are all C notes, each an octave apart.

A bell is tuned by cutting away metal from the inside after it is cast. Tuning of bells is a highly specialized art.

BUICK

1930 "Light Six" Coach. Finished in a very attractive tan. One of the most popular Buicks ever built, the 1930 series 40 is modern and up to the minute, both in appearance and performance. The spacious interior of its Fisher body is restful and luxurious. An adjustable steering column and a steering shock eliminator contribute to driving ease. The famous Buick valve-in-head six-cylinder engine develops 80 horsepower with smoothness and silence. Here is all the acceleration and hill-climbing ability any one could ask for. A used Buick is always a good investment, but this 1930 model with only a fraction of its potential mileage actually used is exceptional. The tires are excellent and the engine in tip-top condition.... $325

Walt Mason, Himself

The Rattlesnake.

All pussyfooting scorning, as being most unfair, the rattler sounds his warning, to let me know he's there. I hear his rattles sounding, as I traverse the flats, and you may see me bounding like circus acrobats. I seek the higher perches, and language quaint I drool, that's seldom heard in churches, or in the Sabbath school. And then I look for boulders and stones and concrete blocks, and spavin both my shoulders, aheaving heavy rocks. I stand off at a distance and pelt that reptile gay, which can not make resistance, since I'm so far away. It's only when I've slain it, and sit down to reflect, attempting to explain it, and make my course correct, that I begin to wonder why I performed that way, and smote a snake asunder that stood up for fair play. Then by remorse I'm eaten, I feel I've lost my grip; the rattler has me beaten for dead game sportsmanship. The cobras raise no riot, no fire alarms they hear; they go along so quiet you do not know they're there; in silence goes the adder, and eke the fer-de-lance, and they will make you sadder whene'er they have the chance. That good old honest battler, the fairest snake on deck will sound his trenchant rattler before he bites your neck.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY — A Confession and Offer — By Harry J. Tuthill

AND I REGRET THAT I HAD TO DISTURB YOU TWO....AH..MEN QUESTIONING MY SERVANTS WITHOUT EVEN ASKING MY PERMISSION BUT....AH. DID YOU MAKE ANY DISCOVERIES OR..?
PA-LENTY MAJOR, PA-LENTY.
THE CASE OF THE MISSING MEMORY IS SOLVED! WE KNOW ALL, ALL!
ALL? YOU MEAN THE SERVANTS BLABBED? TOLD YOU..? PLEASE, BE SEATED, BOYS.
FRANKLY, MY DEAR MAJOR, THE CAT IS OUT OF THE BAG.
WE KNOW THAT YOU DO NOT INTEND TO KEEP YOUR PROMISE TO MARRY MRS. DARDANELLA, RIGHTO?
MY PROMISE, FIDDLESTICKS! ONE EVENING I TOLD HER A VERY FUNNY STORY ABOUT WEDDING BELLS, INSTEAD OF LAUGHING SHE, WITHOUT ONE WORD OF WARNING, GRABBED ME AND SAID, OH MAJOR THIS IS SO SUDDEN!
WELL I JUST LAUGHED— THEN.
BUT TO MAKE A LONG STORY SHORT, I WAS HOOKED.
THEN IN SELF-DEFENSE I FIGURED OUT THIS LOST MEMORY THING... AND THE STORY THAT I MIGHT ALREADY HAVE A WIFE.
I TOLD SIBYL I'D GIVE YOU BOYS $1000 TO SOLVE THIS CASE. NOW I OFFER YOU TWICE THAT MUCH TO HAVE A HEART AND LEAVE IT UNSOLVED.
